EVIL HABITS.

It is related that an Indian once It is related that an Indian once found a young lion, and as he seemed weak and harmless, he never attempted to control him. But every day the lion gained in strength and became more difficult to manage. At last, when excited by rage, he fell upon the Indian and tore him to pieces. It is thus with evil habits and bad passions. Have you an ungovernable temper? Do you get so angry that you can not, or think you cannot, contain yourself? If so, you cannot, contain yourself? If so, you have an untamed lion. If your appetite for stimulants or natcotics is so overpowering that you become almost dellrious without them? The lion has aiready got the mastery and will bring you down unless you cast him off Look into our jails, prisons and poor houses, and see the miserable victims there with their meuths full of filthy stuff, and their bodies recking with the stench of whiskey or tobacco, and you will see how much more there is of the animai than of the Godlike human in such perverted and fallen creatures! The lion has them by the throat and will not let go. He has crushed them to earth, and they lie in the agony of filthiness and helpless despair. Reader, do you rather admire the tragrance of g mai than of the Godlike human in such nice Havana? And is the sparkling wine so delicious and exhibitating? Look out! The lion grows upon that which feeds it; and though you are master to-day, you may be a siave to-merrow. What are your habits?—Phrenological Journal.

SHORT STORY FOR PARENTS.

A bright little girl was playing croquet, and knocking her ball with the intention of placing it in position so that she could pass through the wicket when her time to play should come again; was somewhat displeased to see it roll too far, so that she was stillout of position. position. Without attering a word of complaint, she walked quickly to the ball, and with her foot rolled it to the place, where she had endeavored to have place, where she had endeavored to have it stop. Another in the game kindly reproved her; told her that it was wrong, and that if she learned things which were wrong in small things, like which were wrong in small things, like a game of pleasure, she would be more likely to do so in large things when she should be thrown into the great struggles, of life. To this she readily responded, "Why, I saw grandma place her ball before the wicket the same way awhile ago." And no argument could convince her but that it was not right to thus take advantage of her playmates, because she 'saw her grandma do the same thing." Thus an innocent little girl chanced to be the observer of an act by one to whom she looked for an example, and thus a little mind was poisoned which was perhaps as pure as poisoned which was perhaps as pure as the fresh-fallen snow. And thus seed is often sown in the child which must sprout and bear fruit, and "Oh! what shall the harvest be?" How careful we should be to avoid the appearance of vil. and remember that is the seed seed. evil, and remember that in the smallest deed the eye of some person looking to us for an example may be upon us.
