MR. DAYTON'S HOUSEKEEPER. "WANTED — A housekeeper. No one but an elderly person, competent, and of the highest respectability need apply. Call between the hours of three and four, Thursday, April sixth, at No. — Michigan Avenue."

Kate Franklin read this in the paper which lay on the counter in the little grocery while waiting to have an ounce or two of tea done up, and a roll of baker's bread.

baker's bread.

She repeated the number of the house over to herself, as she received the change from the grocer.

She prepared the tea after she returned to the little bare attic, and ate her carnty med mechanically. She forgot scanty meal mechanically. She forgot how unsatisfied her appetite still was, in her busy thought.

A stranger in a strange place, successively she had trie! to find a situacessively she had trie! to find a situation as a teacher, copyist, in a store, sewing. She had failed on the first three, and was starving on the last.

She would apply for the place, but she would need references. Only one person she knew in the whole great city, of sufficient influence — Mrs.
Davenport, the rich, haughty step-sister who had ill treated her geutle mother while she lived, and had hated Kate herself. Perhaps. Kate thought, she would permit me to refer to her, be-cause glad to have her descend to menial employment.

menial employment.

Kate was competent for the situation, for during her mother's long illness, and during her father's absence, she had the entire charge of their large family and splendid house.

But an "elderly woman." Now Kate was not an elderly woman, being only twenty; but she remembered, with a sort of pleasure, that in private theatricals in happier days, she had imitated the voice, and assumed the character of an old woman with great success. She knew how to stain the skin to give an old and wrinkled appearance, cess. She knew how to stain the skin to give an old and wrinkled appearance, and she had in the bottom of a box, some false gray hair and a muslin cap worn on one of these occassions. She did not need to look so very old—only to present a mature and matrouly ap-

Mr. Edward Dayton waited at home Mr. Edward Dayton waited at nome after dinner to see the respondents to his advertisement. He was a handsome man, not yet thirty, with a gay, frank, good-natured countenance. He leaned back in a nonchalant way, with his feet on another chair.

"There ought to be a Mrs. Dayton or manage these housekeeping matters."

to manage these housekeeping matters.
Well, there's time enough."
Two applicants were seen and dismissed in Mr. Dayton's gentlemanly way.

A third was usbered in. Mr. Dayton instructively laid aside his cigar, and placed a chair for his visitor.

The ladylikeness and propriety of her manner pleased him at once. "Fallen manner pleased him at once. "Fallen fortunes," he commenced to himself. She answered his questions readily,

She answered his questions readily, but in a few words.

"A silent woman—a good thing," was his inward remark.

"I think you will suit me, Mrs.——, what may I understand your name?"

"Franklin."

" Mrs. Franklin, you will be requirod to go out of town, about seven miles, to my country house, Oak Grove—in the town of Embury, on the Grand Central Railroad. The salary I propose to pay is six hundred dollars per annum. Do my terms suit you?"
She answered, quietly, that they did.
"Then it is all settled. By the way,

I suppose you have references, though that is a mere matter of form." The name of Davenport was given.

'Davenport? Robert Davenport?

I know them. All right. If convenient, you will go to-morrow, Mrs. Franklin, or the next day. I shall not come till the middle of next week, and prob ably bring a friend or two with me. Have the chambers in the centre and wings prepared, if you please. The housekeeper there now will not leave until Saturday. She will show you round." round."

"it's all settled, I believe. By the

"It's all settled, I believe. By the way," his eye falling on the rusty black dre s, "you may like an advance as an evidence of the bargain. It is quite customary, I believe, to do so."

The house-keeper's hand closed on the fifteen dollars that he gave her; and the words she would have said were left unuttered. She moved to the door. He opened it for her courteousiv.

" Good morning, madam." " Good morning," she replied.

"I cannot starve. I must go. I can keep up my disguise," she murmured.

keep up my disguise," she muraured.

Mr. Dayton, accompanied by a friend, arrived at his country house the ensuing week. Everything within and about the house was in perfect order. If the new housekeeper had made a few mistakes at first, they were soon rectified. Every room she had touched showed a magicat change.

Her predecessor had been one of the kind who believed in the sunlight never entering a room for fear of fading the carpet

the carpets.

Mr. Dayton felt the change without knowing the reason of it. He looked around him with a satisfied air.

It was not possible to find fault with the variety and quality of the food placed before them, nor the manner of its being served; and the table appointments were perfect; and Dayton congratulated himself upon having secured such a jewel of a housekeeper.

The week passed, and a holiday came.

Mr. Dayton had gone to town the day previous to remain the rest of the week. The housekeeper had given permission

The housekeeper had given permission to the servants to go also. She felt a welcome relief to have the house and the day to herself. She locked the doors carefully after the last servant. She would make the most of the day. She would make no dinner, only a lunch. She had almost forgotten her real character in that which she had assumed; but to day she could be her-self without fear of intrusion or discovery.

She laid aside her cap and gray tresses, washed the stain from her skin, and arranged her luxuriant halr in beand denned a pretty. coming curis, and donned a pretty, fresh musito, which fitted well the slight, graceful figure. This done, she entered the parior and stood before the mirror, as attractive a figure as one mirror, as attractive a figure as one would often see.

"Truly I have forgotten my own looks! I am Kate Franklin after all!" langhed she.

Removed from the long restraint, her spirits rebounded. She felt gay, lighthearted, and like committing any foolsthrees.

"Miss Franklin," said she, in the mineing, affected tones of an exquisite, "it would be inexpressible pleasure to hear the music of that long silent voice." It would be a great pity to deprive you of it then," she answered, in her natural voice, "and myself also," she added; and going to the plane she opened it and played a few pieces with exquisite taste and skill, and then she sang song after song, in a sweet, clear, sang song after song, in a sweet, clear, cultivated voice. She chose at first the brilliant and triumphant, then the sad and plaintive succeeded. There were tears in her eyes when she rose. But and plaintive succeeded. There were tears in her eyes when she rose. But to-day her moods were capriclous.

"Mrs. Franklin, who is playing the plane?" she asked, in excellent imitation of Mr. Dayton's voice.

"It is only I, sir, dusting the keys. They need dusting so often," she replied, in Mrs. Franklin's mature tones; and she dusted them vigorously with her preket handkerchief.

"Ah, me," she said. "Now what other foolish thing shall I do to prove to myself that I am not an elderly housekeeper, but a young lady, who, by virtue of her age, should be gay, by right of birth, wealthy, and of consideration, visited and visiting, as Mr. Dayton's lady visits and is visited. He is noble, good and handsome," she said with a sigh. "She will be happy How gracefully she danced at the party the other evening, when the old housekeeper was permitted to look on. She looks good and amiable, too. Mr. Dayton danced with her three times. I wonder if I have forgotten how to dance?" and humming an air she floated gracefully about the room.

She stopped, breathless, her cheeks brilliant from the exercise, her splendid hair disarranged.

"I believe I feel like stiff, old Mrs.

"One more song by that heavenly voice, Miss Franklin, and I shall go away dreaming I have heard angels sing," in the ludicrously affected voice she had before imitated

"Ah," she laughed, yet half sadly, "the compliments poor old housekeeper Franklin receive. I hope won't spoil her, and turn her silly old head."

She sat down again at the piano, and sang "Home, Sweet Home;" then played one of Beethoven's grandest, most solemn pieces.

She rose and closed the piano.

The housekeeper, as usual when Mr. Dayton was alone, sat at the table. It had commenced to rain violently, and the weather had grown suddenly cold.

the weather had grown suddenly cold.

Mr. Dayton, as he had done occasionally, invited her to the library, where a cheerful fire burned in the grate. He read the letters and the papers which he had brought with him from town, while she knitted.

An hour or more passed in silence; indeed, the housekeeper seldom spoke except when asked a question. At length Mr. Dayton looked up at her, and said, abrupty;

"Yours must be a lonely life, Madam. If it is not a painful subject, may
