WHAT HAPPENED.

[The following description of a Surprise Donation Party, given by the Members of the Lutheran Congregation, of Lehigh, to their Pastor, was not written for publication, but is now published in the CARBON ADVOCATE by particular request. In the latter part names are introduced and situations made, which will scarcely be understood by persons who were not present.]

Let me tell you, kind friends, what happened one eye.

The story, I'm sure, you will fully believe. For whispers about on the soft evening air. Proclaimed you were coming, and said you were here.

On a small mountain village of humble renown, The moon, with her pale light, softly looked down.

On homes that were happy and homes full of love, The joy and the sorrow, who ever shall know! In one sad night, in study so brown, He seemed, to himself, alone in the town.

"I'm tired and weary," he mentally said, "I'll lay aside books and hasten to bed. No more can I do, I'm sure I must be best. To-morrow, when I awake, I will have rest."

But, alas for his plans! disturbed they must be; An host is awaiting, dear pastor, for thee. For on the stairs, in the silence of night, Columns are moving to left and to right.— Still he is dreaming of comfort and ease, And his eyes are closed, but the hymns, if you please.

The metres he wrote or will they be long, And as a voice, sweet and low, he heard a song. But while they consider the do, re, mi, do, The hymns come crowding in softly below.

Through the doorway they are flung with airy feet, What music! all this, death evil betide! But a merry laugh from the many bright eyes.

Oh, pastor! 'tis surely a happy surprise, When all was arranged, a messenger went To interrupt those on music intent.

"Your eyes are dimmed," I'm glad," quoth she, "For a young man, who is calling for thee, Mayhap 'tis a wedding, for weddings you know, Come often, my dear, in time of the snow."

A smile lights up her face, and she says, "As she quietly said, 'I'll go, then, good bye.'"

"No, no," said the pastor, "much good you will By hearing the service; you'd better remain. You surely must stay, and in less than an hour, He prepared to descend—and the organist stood, Then he eagerly sought for his literary true.

For what, without that, could the minister do? And with a firm step and a serious air, He passed from the room and descended the stair.

He opened the door—but, sorely amazed, Bewildered he stood and aghast gazed. Of youths there were plenty, and maidens a score.

Of the long ago wedded a great many more: And up on the table, piled high in the air, Were books and bundles, long, short, round and square.

But the voice of a friendly horn, And a cordial grasp of the hand, Recalled his wandering thoughts.

"As he surveyed the scene, he said, 'We are come dear sir,' it said, 'Our various gifts to bring. To cheer your weary life, and to add, With a well meant offering, 'The trifles and what we have.'"

The pastor said, with a smile, "I am glad with kindly thoughts In grateful words to respond. The pastor said, with a smile, 'Was a woman to the fun. Now, pastor, open these, Open into every one. And his troubles all forgot, He went to work with glee; And every eye was bent, Each hidden thing to see.

They were small like coils revealed, And bound in leather, cloth and paper, And some in silver and gold, And some in shining tin; Their covers were large and small, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

Will you remember he said, And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white; And some in silver and gold, And some in shining white.

It is time for the commencement of worship, but the old white-haired pastor has not arrived. What can it mean? He was never dilatory before in coming to the house of worship. There is a profound silence, followed by a rustle of robes and expectancy, as a tall, slight figure, with hair in golden wavelets, enters and mounts the pulpit, and then announces to the waiting assembly that the good old patriarch has been suddenly called away to join the spirits of the just made perfect; and with a subdued and modest demeanor, he gives out one of David's grand old psalms, arranged in metre. The chorister arises and faces the congregation, and without musical accompaniment, the simple tune is sung. The voices are lower and softer than usual, in memory of the saint departed; and mingled with them is a tenor voice of surpassing sweetness, which thrills the being of quiet Agnes McKee. Now the folded hands become relaxed, the lips slightly apart, and the dark gray eyes seem lighted by a reflected beam of inspiration from the glorious orbs of the young divine. His theme is a grand one—Immortality! Death is swallowed up in victory! And there is a magnetic thrill felt all through the plegmatic listeners, invoked by the power of devotional eloquence. The sermon ended, the young preacher sinks down exhausted. After the service there are no congratulations from the elders, but they, with the rest of the congregation, sobriety filed out with a new sensation filling their hearts. At the portal, Agnes looks back to catch one more glimpse of that golden-crowned head. The minister is coming toward her with extended hands, and "Agnes!" "Robert!" are all the words uttered in the joy of meeting.

Six months elapsed, during which time Robert Angus, the young and eloquent preacher, was installed pastor of the "Covenanters." The old church had been "reformed;" the majority of the congregation were for the change, but Elder McKee "set his foot down" against such innovations on the orthodox mode of worship, as singing hymns and playing the organ. Music, he affirmed, was of the Evil One; and the whole McKee clan, who tone their cue from him, echoed the sentiment, and they left the new pastor and his followers in high
