Letter from Manch Chunk.

Monday, June 19, 1876. Opening day of the quarterly meeting of Court attracted, of course more than the name namber of attendants, especially since it was expected that Campbell would be arraigned. At the bour of noon our staid litt e Borouch was full to overflowing, and business men in genetal, and landlords in particular, were doing a live's trade. The great majority of these present hod, of course, come to attend the great trial and to listen to the story of Jas. Kerrigno, the great squeaker. But other matters engrousing the immediate attention of the Court, the great squealer did not put in an appearance, althougt sundry juwenile squealers kept things lively bont the Court room during the sitting of the Court. But then they were little squale a londly protesting sgainst being left fatheries In this wide, wide, world, on account of the fol-ly of unsuspecting mothers. But, we'll drop the babies, and proceed to matters of more vita₁ importance to the community at large.
