LONDON Hair Color Restorer

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR

To its Natural Vitality and Color. HERE IS THE PROOF

Of its Superior Excellence.

Read this Home Certificate testified to by Edward B. Garrigues, one of the most competent Drugosis and Chemist in Philadelphia, a man whose verzelly none can doubt:

I am bappy to add my testimony to the great value of the "London Hair Color Resturer, which reacred my hair to its original dark color, and the line appears to be permanent. I am satisfied that this preparation is nothing like a dee, but operates upon the ascertiment. It is also a beautiful hair dressing, and promotes the growth. I purchased the first bettle from Ec. B. Garrigues, druggest. Tenth and Contosets who can also testify my hair was very gray when I commenced its use.

No. 730 N. Ninth-st., Philadelphia. DR SWATKE & SON - Respected Friends: I have the eleasure to inform you that a lady of my acquaintance, Mrs Mi ler; is deligited with the soccess of your "London Color Hav Restorer." Her hair was falling rapidly and quite gray. The color has been restored, and the falling out entirely stopped by its use.

Druggies: Cor. Tenth and Contos ats., Phila. All that art can accomplish in beautifying strengthening, thickening and scioning the usir is effected by using "London Hair Color Restorer." It strimulates and forces a new growth: if gray, restores its natural color, and renders it sliky and beautify color in the sciip clean, cool and healthy. All druggists sell it. Price 55 cents, six bettles, St. Sen by express to any address.

My First Cigar.

I'm almost afraid to say how long it is ago, but it must be far on toward forty years since I set aside money that, in an ordinary way, would have been de-voted to the succulent coffee, the crisp hardcake, the acidulated lemon rock, or the ginger bread parliament, to the purchase of my first eigar. I'm afraid that my moral feelings must have been at a very low ebb just then, for I went to the shop quite prepared to say that it was for an uncle; but as I was not asked any questions by the dealer, who contented himself with wrapping the rell of leaf most carefully in paper, I was spared the untruth, spent three pence for the coarsely made darkhued Bengal cheroot, and smuggled it to the school, feeling all the while as if I had committed some awful crime for the sake of attaining an unknown joy, which was to be all beautiful ecstacy, delight, and dreamy, delicious delirium.

It was. That half-holiday I went about with my jacket tightly buttoned up, stealing one hand inside every now and then to feel the end of the roll of paper, deep down in its seclusion, and that it was still there. Not a schoolfel-low approached me whom I did not mentally accuse of knowing of its exist-ence, and harboring designs to obtain it.

" Lend up your knife, Jones !" said Tompkin Primus, about three o'clock. "Haven't got one," I said, shortly.
"Yes you have," said Tompkins—
there, in your jacket po'ket."

He made a snatch at it—a horrible snatch but I eluded it by ducking down under his arm, and running to the other end of the playground. But it was an awful escape, and be had nearly broken my brittle treasure right in half. I think it must have been about six clock, when it was growing dusk, that I slipped away, got over the fence into Barnby's field, and down behind the big eln's, where, after listening for a few minutes lest I should have been seen or heard, I pulled out the cheroot, and skinned it by taking off the paper. Then I had to pause for a few moments, in doubt as to whether I ought to put the thin or the thick end into my mouth, deciding at last in favor of the thin, and popping it between my lips. Ugh ! But it was nasty-simply horrible to my fresh young palate.

But it was manly to smoke, and if it had been ten times as unsatisfactory of flavor, I should not have flinched took out my box of matches, and struck several, blowing them out in turn as I tried to puff at the cigar and feeling all the time as if it was the fifth of November, and I were about to start a squib.
I managed it, though, at last, and had the end well alight, the smoke draw ing through freely, so that I obtained good mouthfuls, and worked away. It was rather hot and strong certainly, but—draw—puff—draw puff—draw —pugh, bow old and mant. I did feet. How I drew myself up, and leaned my shoulder against the fence, glorying in the pungent incense, which would make me choke a little now and then, and get into my nose in a rather awkward man-

But then I was smoking, and the ela-

I felt delightful. I have since come to the conclusion that the elation was due to my natural excitement, consequent upon this glori-ous step out of bounds, moral and physical, and not from any great potency in the tobacco leaf.

The cigar kept well alight, and I was about one third through it. It was very dark, and there was a sort of furious joy in the whole transaction. I felt like one of the old heroes of historical romance-a Sir Francis Drake-a Capt. Kidd-a Paul Jones-a jolly free-boot-er; and, in imagination, clothed myself in buskins and tights, wore secret armor, and was ready to do any deed of dating.

I quailed once; had my name been called in the school-room, where the called in the school-room, where the boys were learning to-morrow's lessons? Had I been missed or asked for by any of my schoolfellows? I hoped not, could see their shadow on the blinds, as they went to and fro in the room, and I could see the light in the doctor's study, where I believed he smoked : and here was I smoking too-as good a man as he and-Ugh I.

That was a curious shudder that passed through me, accompanied by a strange sensation, as if some one had suddenly lifted off the top of my skull and poured in cold water. Ah, yes! there it all was, plain enough, mixing with and thinning down my brains, so that my head felt-felt so light, so ethereal. Yes, it was water, certainly; but the water had suddenly vapored, as in the experiments not from heat, but from cold; and my head was now, as it were filled with gas, and fast becoming a balloon, swelling out rapidly, and raisingraising.

Yes, there was no doubt about it, and I was slightly alarmed, but perfectly helpless. My feet had certainly left the ground, and I was going up, up, till I found that it was only in imagination; for though my heels had left the ground it was only for a few seconds, and I was lying flat, with my head resting on one of the gnaried roots of an elm tree one of the half-dozen in the clump, which had evidently fallen into a high state of delight, and were waltzing around me in the most ludicrous fashion.

The fence over which I had clambered began its tricks now rising, now fall-ing, as if to crush me, until the pall-ings nearly touched my nose and then rising again to bend over in the other

The feeling of coolness that I had felt in my head now began to steal all down my back, and along my legs and arms, till it reached the extremities, when, like some heavy gas, it began to flow back again, luch by luch, to my spinal marrow, and then slowly along it to my head.

Next my heart began to flutter in a strange way, just as if it had been suddenly endowed with a pair of dove's wings and was trying to fly out of my breast; and all the time the sensation of lightness went on increasing until I seemed to be lifted up and dropped down, again and again, till I took tightly hold of an old piece of root with one hand, wondering the while what was coming next. And the eigar? Ah, that was sticking still between two of my fingers. It had gone out, and it didn't matter, I did not want to light it again, for I felt as if I had had enough, especially when at the end of a few moments there came the sensation of having just swallowed a small powder in a teaspoonful of jam, and not liking it at all. Ugh ! That was the most dreadful part of the whole affair, worse even than the throb, throb, throb that came new in my head, just as if drops of mol-ten lead were falling from one temple to the other, and then being forced back again. I believe I groaned just then, and wondered whether I was going to die. I know I mentally declared that the cheroot must have been a horribly bad one and I recalled the fact that I had often heard men say that some cigars were so bad that they could not smoke them, and this must have been one of the bad ones. "I'll never buy another of that fellow" I said to myself.

And then yawned frightfully, and uttered another groan. At last a fresh thought entered my mind. This was not the effects of the cigar; but of indigestion-those hard, sucty puddings, which we had for din-

"Pehaps," I thought, "a few whites might do me good."

I sat up against the pailing, and, with my hands trembling, and a sold prespiration standing out all over my forehead I felt for the match box, struck a light, and placing the cigar end between my lips, drew and puffed till it was once more alight.

How strong it tasted this time, and how hot and pungent seemed the smoke! It wouldn't go right either, but seemed to treat my mouth like an ill-constructed chimney, and ran back-wards down my throat, and made me wards down my throat, and made me choke, got up my nose, and made me sneete, into my eyes till I was half blinded, and then—ohl how I shuddered, and felt pale all over. I must be going to die. I never felt so strange before—it was simply horrible; and I leaned back against the palling, the clear dropped from between my fingers, and then I slid sidewas to the earth. and then I slid sidewise to the earth, and lay gasping for air, faint and help-less; for that was a very, very strong old cheroot, with a rankness in its nature that I should not even care to fos-

How long I remained there I cannot tell-it must have been an hour before I felt sufficiently recovered to sit up ; and nearly another before I climbed the fence, and stood swaying on the other side, feeling so far from like a freebooter, that I imagined I must have com-mitted a murder to have been in such a state of horrible nervousness and dread. I remember casting away the match box and sneaking in at the side door and up to the dormitories, where I hastily crawled into bed, sinking soon after into a strange vacuity—half stupor, half sleep—from which I was awakened by a shrill voice at my side, crying out-"Plee, sir, here's Jones, sir, in his bed. Then the figure of an usher loomed near me, and a series of questions began, to all of which I responded with sighs and the plea of a sick headache. Then up came the house keeper to feel my puse and head, and declared me free from fever. me free from fever.

"He'il have to see the doctor in the morning," said the dame.

But I did no', for I got up next morning as well as any of my school chums; and I did not try another cigar that half.—Once a Week.

The countryman not being quite up in mythology, and thinking perhaps, a Democrat painted the picture, after looking at it for some time turned to his companions and said; "Well now, that does beat ail; I tell you what, that's pretty hard on Grant."
