The Value of an Oath.

BY JUDGE CLARK.

It was an unpopular case to defend The crime charged against my client was one of shocking actrocity, the murder of his own child. The popular verdict had already condemned ism, and there was little doubt but that of the jury would go the same way.

Arthur Berkley, the prisoner, had married Edith Granger, a wealthy helg-ess whose father had died, leaving her his whole fortune, to the exclusion of a profligate son whom he had disinherriled and driven from his home.

Mrs. Berkley died within a year after marriage, leaving an intant a few weeks old, a feeble little creature, requiring Dr. Baldwin almost took up his quarters in the house, often passing the night there, that he might be at hand in case of need. One of these nights, the doctor, as he afterwards stated in his evidence, after retiring to bed, feeling solicitous about his little charge, got up and stole softly to the nursery to see that everything

He found the door sjar and a dim light burning within. As he advanced, he distinctly saw Arthur Berkley standing by the table, holding to the child's mouth the bottle from which it was accustomed to receive its food. At the sound of the doctor's footsteps, he quickly put down the bottle, and steal-thily left the apartment by a side enterance

Not a little surprised at these movements, the doctor approached and laid his hand upon the child's face, which he found in violent convulsions, which were followed, in a few seconds, by the stillness of death.

A post mortem examination, and analysis of the contents of the stomach, placed it beyond doubt that prussic acid had been administered. And an exami nation of the bottle, found where Berk-tachment to his child.

ley had left it, proved that the milk in contained a large quantity of the same deadly poison.
On this evidence Berkley was arrested and indicted for murder; and there was not a dissenting voice as to his guilt. An incentive to the crime was found in the fact that, as heir to his child, be would inherit the fortune which had descended to the latter through the death of its mother. No wonder a deed so monstrous, actuated by motives so mercenary should excite the deepest indignation. Berkley's previous character had been good. He had always appeared gentle and kind; had been a devoted husband; and, during the brief period of his life, had shown the tenderest at-

In my conference with him, he seemed overwhelmed with grief, but strenuously denied all imputations of guitt, asserting that he had not gone to the nursery after retiring that night, till called by the alarm of the child's death. Of course, his statements, in the face of proofs so damaging, weighed but little I had no confidence in them myself. Still, it was my professional duty man on trial for his life.

had every right the law accorded him. This duty performed, my conscience would be clear whatever the result. It would be tedious to dwell on the steps preceding the trial. I interposed no obstacles in its coming on speedily. My aim was not to thwart the ends of who had entrusted me with his cause, justice, but to see it fairly meted out. Dr. Baldwin was the first and chief witness. He told his story clearly and methodically; and it was easy to see it carried conviction to the jury. My rigid cross-examination only served to bring out his evidence with more distinctness of detail. I elicited the fact, for instance, that the child's nurse lay in the same room; and she was asleep when the doctor entered and that it was to her he first announced the child's death. I also examined fully as to the prisoner's acts at the time the alarm given, endeavoring to show that he came from the direction of his own chamber, appearing to have been just aroused from sleep. But I made nothing of this, the witcess stating that his agitation had distracted his attention from these points.

The doctor had only recently settled among us, but his conduct had been so exemplary that he had made many friends. He had especially won the confidence of the prisoner. I interro-gated him as to his past career, but brought out nothing to his discredit. The evidence of the chemist who nade the analysis was next put in, and the State's attorney " rested."

" I have brought the nurse here," he said, "but as she was askep when the prisoner entered, her evidence is unimportant. I thought it my duty to have her here, however, to afford the other side the opportunity to call her if they

Nothing could render the prisoner's case more ho cless than it was already, while something might come out to his advantage. " I will call the witness," I said. She was a middle-aged woman, of not unprepossessing appearance. Her agitation was visible; and I noticed that, in taking the oath, she laid her hand besides the book and not upon it. "I ask that the witness be sworn with her hand on the book," I said, calling attention to the omission. The judge so ordered; and the witness's hand shook violently as she reluctantly obeyed the circetion, and the oat: was re-administered.

After a few preliminary questions as to the hour of her retiring, her falling asieep, &c.
"What is the next thing you remember ?" I asked. The witness hesitated. " Answer the question," said his Honor. "I-I heard a noise as of some one coming into the room," she faltered.

" Did you see any one enter ?" Another pause. I repeated the inquiry.

" I did," was the answer.
" What did the person do?" The woman's face grew paler, and it was with difficulty she found utterance.

"He came to the side of the cradle," she said, "with the bottle of milk in his hand, and put it to baby's month.

The sudge and State's attorney both bent forward in eager attention. The latter, it was evident, had not expected this testimony. I felt that my question, thus far, had only served to draw the halter closer client's neck. But I had gone too far to retreat. My voice trembled almost as much as that of the witness as I proceeded.

"Did you recognize that person?"
"I did," was the answer, scarcely My client's life hung on the answer to the next question! The silence of the court 100m was death-like. I dread-ed to break it. The sound of my voice startled me when I spoke.

"Who was it?" I asked.
Her lips moved but no sound came. " By the solemn oath you have taken on that sacred book, and by your hopes of salvation hereafter, Ladjure you to tell the truth !" I said, earnestly. Her agitation was fearful to witness.

She shook from head to foot. A deadly pallor overspread her face. Slowly raising her trembling hand, and pointing at Dr. Baldwin.

"That is the man!" she almost shricked. Then, in quick, wild accents she went on to tell that on finding himself discovered by reason of her waking, the culprit, who was no other than George Granger, Mrs. Berkley's profigate brother, had disclosed to her that his purpose was to regain his lost inheri-tance by putting out of the way those who stood before him and it, promising the witness to provide for her handsome ly, if she kept his secret; but, when put to the test, she had found herself unable to violate her solemn oath. George Granger, alias Dr. Baldwin, would have left the court-room, but an officer was ordered to detain him; and when his disguise was removed, though he had been absent many years, there were many present who could testify to his identity. My client was acquitted on the spot; and his cell in the prison was that night occupied by his false accuser.—New York Ledger.

CUSTER'S FIRST CHARGE. When the boy lieutenant was suddeny promoted to be a brigadier-general, and put in charge of the Michigan brigade, there was much fault-finding. They did not want this mere boy to lead them. They did not believe he would fight. It was but a few days before they were called upon to make the first charge, which General Custer's biographer thus describes : The charge of the First Michigan The charge of the First Michigan at Gettysburg is described by an eye-witness as something magnificent, and yet the one thing that gave it weight is not mentioned in Custer's report. We have seen how, the previous day, the general had charge at the head of a single army, solely for the purpose of encouraging his men to win their re-spect and affection. At Gettysburg he completed his victory over the brigade by the manner in which he led the second charge in which he participated with his men. When this single regiment in column of squadrons, moved forward to the attack, every man knew that it was the last reserve that started on an almost hopeless task. Nothing but the spectacle of the young general at their head, sharing their dangers, could have inspired them to such an effort, and it was the magnificent spectacle of his gallant and knightly figure, far in the van, that nerved every arm in that column. Hating him at Haus-over, they began to respect him at Hun-terston; after Gettysburg, they adored " The result of this attack was that Hampton's cavalry was driven back, the infantry ordered up to support it, the whole ammunition train of Lee threatened, and much of the vigor of the assault on the right paralyzed. Meanwhile Buford, on the other flank of the army, had prevented an equally dangerous turning movement in that direction, and the battle of Gettysburg had been won."-Sheldon & Co.'s Life.

-A Scotch minister, after a hard day's labor, and while at a dinner tea, as he called it, kept incessantly praising the ham, and stating that Dunlop at hame was fond o' ham as he was, when the landlady kindly offered to send her the present of a ham. Its unco kin' o' ye, unco kin', but f'il no put ye to the trouble; I'll tak it hame on the horse afore me. When, on leaving, he mounted, and the ham was put in a sack, some difficulty was experienced in getting it to lie properly. His inventive genius soon out the Gordian knot. I think, mistress, a cheese in the ither en' wad mak' a gran' balance. The hint was immediately acted on, and, like another John Gilpin, he moved away with his balance true.
