BY S. ANNIE PROST.

"I suppose I must call. Eleven o'-lock. The old gentleman said I was not to stand upon ceremony, so I'll run down to day. It is dismally lonesome here, and somebody said the Lawier girls were the belies of the place. Who was it told me that Julia Lawlor was the belle of Rushtown, and that Dolly was the nicest little thing in the world?

All this in soliloquy, as Mr. Thomas Bardeil donned his daintiest walking dress, drew on his lavender kids, put on his glosslest silk hat over his crop of curly hair, and surveying his hand-some, faultlessly attired self in the long mirror, sailled forth.

Rushtown was a collection of country cats, a mile from a populous borough, and the Eardell place was one of the most stately of the many superb houses of which it was composed. Thomas Bardell, my hero, was the nephew of the late owner of the Bardell Place, and the late owner of the Bardell Place, and upon the death of that gentleman had inherited his entire property, greatly to his own amazement Mr. Julius Bardell, deceased, having quarreled with every relation he had in the world, and announced his intention of leaving every dollar to a charity.

That he did not, but relenting, made a will in his nephew's favor, brought Mr. Thomas Bardell from a college in Germany, where he was finishing his education, to Rushtown.

He was twenty-four, an orphan, handsome and talented, and had some private fortune before his uncle's death. That he was unspoiled, modest and one who held all women as little lower than the angels, may be attributed to the fact that he had a mother who was a true christian lady, who loved him, and whose death, when he had just attained manhood, was the heaviest sorrow of his life.

Rushtown was an unexplored country to my hero, but Dr. Lawior being the only physician in the place, his resi-dence was easily found.

The hall door stood open, the parior door also was stretched invitingly wide, and after valuey waiting for his ring to be answered, Mr. Bardell stepped in-side the vestibule.

A voice, high above his head, and in the parlor, called:

"Tom, is that you?"

The speaker, Dolly Lawlor, whose name, be it here recorded, was Mable, but who had been called Dolly from her craile, being at the top of a high step-ladder, scrubbing the paint over a French window, heard a voice say:

French window, heard a voice say:
"It is Tom, certainly."
"Hand me my soap, that's a good fellow," said Dolly, from the lofty perch where she was seated, facing the back windows; "you know I am afraid to look down or turn around on the ladder, I am so sure to get giddy."
"Where is the soap?" came in a voice muffled in lauching.

"Close down by the ladder, where it has just dropped. Don't dare to laugu at me, sir, for I am in the depths of affliction. Papa has invited the heir of that splendid Bardell Place to drop in without ceremony. Did you ever, and we just in the middle of spring cleaning? So I left Jane to finish up stairs, and came down myself to make the par-lor decent. There goes my brush ?

Hand it up, that's a dear. The trush was handed up, Dolly, not during to take her eyes from a level, already feeling her head spinning with giddness.

"We can't be grand, of course, and the house will look mean enough after Bardell Place, but we can be clean," she continued, scrubbing vigorously at the paint. "And you know, Tom, he is sure to fall in love with Julia, and it is such a salestific character. is such a splendid chance for her, poor dear. She does so hate our ceons She has gone over now to Mrs. Simp-son's to finish her blue muslin, and she can't help clean, because it will spoil her hands, and they are so pretty. Ju-lia is lovely in blue, because her skin is so fair, if her hair and eyes are dark. She will be perfect when she is rich, Tom. I hope she will have him, and papa and I can jog along forever. We don't mind cheap things as poor Julia does. There! That paint can't be any whiter. I'm coming down, and you can move the ladder to the other win-dow for me, Tom."

But cautiously descending the ladder, Dolly only caught a fleeting glimpse of Doily only caught a fleeting glim, so of a tail figure out at the garden gate. "Well," she said, lugging at the heavy ladder, "if Tom was in such a hurry that he could not more the lad-der, he might at least have waited to say good morning."

Then, being the sweetest tempered of

Then, being the sweetest tempered of woman, though merely a passably pretty girl, Doily ascended the ladder again, and soon forgot. Tom's rudeness in the absorbing duties six had undertaken. In the meantime, Mr. Thomas Bardeil, shaking with laughter, wouldn'this way home ward, inwardly determining to make his next call at Dr. Lawlor's whim Miss Delly was less engrossed in the task of cleaning paint, and the difficulty of maintaining her equilibrium.

equilibrium. "For that must have been Miss Dolly, with the natty little boots, and pink called dress. She had lovely brown hair, though I could not see her face."

The next call made by the heir of the Bardell Place found the parier shining with cleanliness, Miss Juna Lawler, a really beautiful girl, arrayed in the bina muslius at the plane, and Dolly, also in blue muslin, musting. The appearance of the blue muslins was the result ance of the blue musline was the result of Thomas Bardell's apparently careless intimation to busy Dr. Lawlor that he intended to "drop in" that same even-ing. For a wonder the doctor remem-bered the fact, and the "Lawlor girls" were arrayed to receive their guest.

Dolly, in a half an hour, decided that she liked the new comer very much in-deed, and that he would make a very pice brother, when he fell in love with Julia, and married her, as of course it was his manifest destiny to do.

"For Julia really is lovely," thought unselfish little Dolly, "and when he hears her sing, he must lose his heart."

Apparently the singing was as powerful a magnet as Dolly supposed it would be, for scarcely a day or evening passed that Mr. Bardell did not drop in. Tom Lawlor, the doctor's nephew and student, declared Bardell to be a firstrate fellow, and was always bringing him home to tea. Then the garden of the Bardell Place, as summer came on, offered most tempting opportunities for the presentation of bouquets to the fair ladies at Dr. Lawlor's. To be sure, Thomas Bardell did not know that Julia's share always adorned the parlor, while Dolly cried over her's in her own room, and sometimes pressed her rosy lips upon the card of the donor.

Silly little Dolly! For she knew Mr. Bardell was falling deeper and deeper in love with Julia. Did he not fairly haunt the house? Did he not listen entranced when Julia sang, even upsetting all the orderly ar-rangements of Dolly's work-box in his abstraction?

Was not the plc-nic on the Bardell grounds, to which all the friends far and near had been invited, solely the result of Julia's wishes to see the place?

That pic-nic! Somehow it pressed itself upon Dolly's mind that Thomas Bardell was contemplating a proposal on that Juno day, when he was to play host to all the people of Rushtown.

people of Rushtown.

She could not have told why she thought so, nor why she resolved to ask "papa" for permission to visit her aunt in New York for a few weeks. "Just to give them a chance to be alone," she thought, and wondered what made her heart throb so very painfully at the

She made Julia look like an exquisite picture by wreathing field daisies under the rim of chip hat, and fastening her soft white lace at the throat with a bunch of the same flowers.

Then she dressed herself rather hasti-ly, having coried her sister's hair, and ly, having corled her sister's hair, and otherwise made a Cinderella of herself.

She heard nothing of the dismayed exclamation in her father's study of:
