employed in the case knew where Mr. Gilman was, and could have arrested him at any moment if they had been so disposed. As it was, they were not. They employed themselves chiefly in going over to Gilman's Brooklyn house and staying there for the night. As a consequence, these lines are in consequence, in her poor emotional way, whether she shall become insane or not. The doctor, Dr. Louisa, who is the wife of the little church around the corner, on Twenty-eighth street, was an active instrument in the conspiracy of Gilman's friends.
