HIS LUCK.

They were to have been married Thanks. giving evening. Why couldn't he have had even common luck, and made a fair passage! Joe Thorpe or Sam Andrews, who were not half as careful as himself, were probably off Montauk Point by this time, and here he was, south of Matterns, Itali his crew down with fever and ague, a whole suit of sails blown away, his cargo of fruit probably rotten, and the wind hauling to the north ard all the time, with a strong prospect of another gale. It was too had-"too denced bad?" he added with an emphasis alwast allowable under the circumstances, as his glanced at the coropass.

"As unlucky as Arad Thorpe," had passed into a proverb in his native town of Coverly. And yet he was prudent, energetic and smart. He always made money for his owners; but however much he might lay by himself, was sure to be, in some unforem manner, lest.

The Hammerton bank, wherein he had deposited a thousand dollars, had suspended navment. The eashier of the Home Savings Institute had "defalented," leaving him a lear of an equal sum. His little house on Einstreet was burned in his absence, the insurance policy having expired a day or two before. He had been knocked down and robbed of his freight money in Panama. All of which events, occurring at different times, had come nigh to make Arad a fatalist.

But, thanks to Jessie Banks, his betrothed, he had kept up a good heart, and his courage lad won from Banks, pere, the promise that if he brought home three hundred dollars as his own share of the trading voyage in the Caribbean sea be should marry Jessie, without further notice, on the coming Thanksgiving evening.

This voyage he had made some successful ventures, which had notted him about three hundred and fifty dollars, said sum being locked up in his dark below.

"How do you head now, Jerry ?" was his query for the twentieth time; and the unsalisfactory answer, "Rast-north-east, sir?" caused an ejaculation of impatience to escape "Brocky Joe much sick. He want med!

cine," was the salutation which met his ear. san tall, powerfully-built scilor, a Spaniard, He had shipped his erew of four men and second mate in Jamuica, and a rascally-looking set they were, though up to this time they had done well enough, and now that two of them were sick, the remaining two had done double duty; so that Arad had be gun to think very well of them. Taking some quinine from the medicine chest, he went forward, and, entering the little foreastle, which was dimly lighted by swinging lamps, he was about to proceed to the bunk of the supposed sick man, when he was sucidenly seized from behind, a blanket thrown over his head, and almost before he could think, was horried to the rail over which he was thrown in an instant. But Arad, like all Coverly boys, was porfect water-dog; and after coming to the surface, he blew the water from his mouth, worked off his boots, got himself out of his law, so he said nothing, and accompanied pea-jacket by clint of much equirming, and, the old man on shore, where after meeting wiping the spray from his eyes he rose on erest of a wave, he had the cheerful satstaction of seeing the biumsele light of his vessel apparently half a mile distant, and rapidly growing fainter.

"My luck!" was on his tongue, as he struck out, with a vague hope of keeping bimself affoat till morning; and then Jessie's last words came to his mind: "Be sure, Arad, and do all you can; God will do the

With an inward prayer for help, he re solved to make a struggle for life, though he felt his chances were infinitesimally small; and, by that of husbanding his strength, the morning light as it dayined over the turbulent sea found him chilled to the bone, exhunsted and faint, but stiff swimming.

Oh how eagerly, as it grow lighter did he look for a welcome sail! And, rising on a crost of a wave, his heart came almost into his mouth; for not a stone's throw distant was a little hermaphredite brig, under short sail, bearing down upon him. "Hillo-o-o-of" he shouted, with all his

and, as it was his last chance for life, with a despirate energy he sought to intercept her tree, when saddenly her fails were thrown aback, and for a moment, the drifted down toward him, as though he had been seen and measures taken for his relief. As she neared him, he managed, in a roll gone from her davits; and it flashed across his mind that the brig had been deserted-s fact which a voyage of investigation into the cabin confirmed.

An open chart was on the floor, whereupon the vessel's course from a little island n the Windward group had been traced, and further examination of her papers and logbook showed her to be the Spanish brig Bon Carles, bound from Juemel, with box sugar "to any port north of Hatterns."

Arad's mind was made up on the instant. He sounded the pump's well, found nine inches of water therein, and, having refreshed himself from the steward's pantry with Spanish tortillas, he stripped and went at it till the pump sucked.

Then he loosed the lower sails fore and aft, sheeted them home with infinite labor, equared the yards, and went aft to the wheel.

The wind had hauled to the southwest; a glance at the barometer showed that the mercury was rising; and, with high hopes, Arad began his voyage to " a port north'ard of Hatterns,"

" on, if I could?" was the only thought which he dared to give vent to; and, though it did not seem an impossible feat if the weather held fair, he did not venture to carry his hopeful anticipations further.

Four days and nights did he stand at the wheel only leaving it for his hastily-snatched food, or to change the position of the yards, except as he was obliged to take observations; and his heart beat high as, on the twenty-fifth of November, he sighetd land, which he knew, from his course on the chart to be Sandy Hook.

Two hours later, pilot-boat No. 2 was alongside, and three men tent on board when his story was heard. And then Arad laid down for a little nap, which lasted precisely (thirty-six hours; and when heawoke the little brig, under lower topsails and jib, was rounding the light at the entrance of Coverly harbor, with half a gale of wind blowing astern.

" Luck was with you this time, sir," said Joe Carter, one of the pilots, as, the anchor chain ran rapidly out, and the little vessel swung round to the wind. "In three hours ore you'll see it blow great guns."

"God was with me, I think," said Arad. reverently, as they went aloft and snugly towed the stils, which, as Arad used to say, were not much larger than a bandana handkerchief.

Old Banks rowed out in his dary, as was his custom at every new arrival. "What in the deuce!" was his lucid remark as he stared at Amd. And then,

'Humph! Lost your vessel, I s'poss?

Picked up by this here brig, and come home without any money. "Member," has I told ye when ye went away." Arad remembered it very well, and when ne went on to tell Banks, perc, that it was he that had picked up the brig, that she was sugar-laden, and that his share of salv-

The death of Bishop Dupanloup removes om the Roman Catholic Church in France from the Reman Catholic Church in France the ablest and most conspicuous exclesiastic its later shys have known. He died at Lomecy (Loiret), where he was staying with a friend. He had been suffering from pari-carditis, but expired somewhat suddenly. Though Mousigner Dupanloup was best known as a preacher, yet he was the author of several educational and theological works. Hisliterary sequirements were acknowledged by his admission into the French Acade-my, but all his seal in the cause of religion Historry acquiroments were acknowledged by his admission into the French Academy, but all his real in the cause of religion did not obtain for him the honor of a Cardinal's hat. His opinions were too large and liberal to chime in exactly with those of the Roman, Curia, under Pio Nono; and he never heartly supported "I Ultimonationism," though he loyally eccepted the decrees of the Vatican Council as binding on his conscience. Had his life been prolonged, however, it is quite possible that this honor might have been between upon him by Pope Leo. His last publication was a protest against the Voltaire centerary.—Since the war of 1870 he had a seat in the Legislature, and was the soul of the opposition. Monsigner Dupanloup even among the non-religious portion of the people in his diocese was much respected on account of his noble and generous nature.

France is just now plunged in a lottery fever. The grand raffle originally devised for the purpose of raising money to bring working mon and peasants gratis to the Paris Exhibition has swollen into a monster nuisance, and is being used as a vehicle for the most unblushing electural corruption. Nothing can be more discreditable to the French government than their conduct in this affair. At first only a million tickets were to be issued, at one franc a piece; and out of the $200,000 raised one-half was to be devoted to the charitable purpose above incut of the $200,000 raised one-half was to be devoted to the charitable purpose above indicated, while the remainder was to be spent in the purchase of prires consisting entirely of art objects. Even limited to these proportions the lottery was objectionable; for it would have been simpler if the Government had asked the Chambers for a grant in aid of its excursion projects, unless, indeed, the yet more desirable plan had been followed of allowing these excursions to be managed by private charity. The first issue of a million tickets was, however, soon disposed of, thanks to the brisk touting of all officials connected with the finance department—tax collectors, tobacconists, &c. Then a second million was put forth, and then a third. By this time functionaries of all degrees, from this time functionaries of all degrees, from the prefects to postmen and gardes champe-tres, were in full cry, pushing the sale of the lottery ticket; and demands poured in to such an extent that a fourth, fifth, and sixth such an extent that a fourth, fifth, and sixth million were specifily decreed and sold off.

Now it has been decided to emit eight millions; but the Commissioners will probably not step till they have sold their tenth million even if they desist then. There is no reason why they should not go on issuing a million tickets a week for everal weeks longer; for the gambling epidemic with which they have smitten the country is rightly with an intensity which will not soon spend itself. At every new issue $100,000 set apart for the purchase of prizes, so that $500,000 has attendy been amplied to this purpose. But this is not all; for thousands of tradespectle, anxious to advertise themselves, have unde voluntary offerings of their wares, insentuch that every holder of a ticket will have about one chance out of twenty ofdrawing something. Stimulated by this prespect have about one chance out of twenty of draw-ing something. Stimulated by this prospect, and by the magnitude of some of the prises offered, men and women of all degrees, and children, too, for that matter are staking all the frames they can spars on the chance of turning up a fortune. Little urchins in communal schools are clubbing their sons, not only with the approval but with the en-couragement of their teachers, who dread to bank the invenile enthusiasm lest they age money would probably be a nice little couragement of their teachers, who dread to baulk the juvenile enthusiasm lest they should be accused of being heatile to a grand Republican charity. Many village school-masters have themselves been made agents for the sale of tickets. Everywhere these vexationally entieing slips of paper are thrust before people's eyes, and all over France there is a talk only of M. Kranta's "good lots" of $20,000 and $25,000, which are to be said in jewelery or cash, as the winners may
