men ever had, in bringing together tens of thousands. Though in many respects bruils toward the workingman, undoubtedly he had a fellow feeling, the property of the design of the section of the section with the true and the false philanthropy. If Christian people attend meetings for the poor and said to them, "We have left our warm houses to-night to come down and teach you," and so on, one would anore, another would swear, and all would soon clear out. But if a man didn't teli them what he came for, but found one of them in a ditch, picked him out and helped and encouraged him and stood by him, he would at least realize what was being done for him, and the power of sympathy and gratitude would save him. The preacher pieaded for more leniency to ward those who have once transgressed the law, divine or human. As it is now, he said, a man might as well run on the spear points of hell as to go against the sentiment of the civilized community or of Christian churches of to-day. If one attempted to display toward criminals the feeling which Christ had for those who persecuted Him men did not understand it. They said, "Oh, that won't do; that's too thin." They call it sentimentalism and "gush."
