The Fatal Shot.

Dr. E. H. Buss in "Waverley." A caravan consisting of a dozen mules and pack animals.

The ringer fell back, all the time giving thrusts himself, though wounded and hardly able to stand.

"Fire!" commanded the colonel. At the word a sheet of flame burst into the pit.

The ranger had killed two in hand-to-hand conflict. He had received a wound near the heart by a bullet.

A heavy guard was posted after that round the camp, while eyes that could not be closed in sleep watched the stars.

"I wasn't thinkin' about the blue grass of Illinois, Judge, when I went for to assert that this ere was a fine picher.

"Wal, Colonel Quenten, we will leave that to Lize here, yu, gal, come here.

"Think? I don't think nothin', Judge Long; its for away, and I had rather tend the bacon than listen to your yarns."

"That's the way 'tis with that gal; she ain't got no such sentiment as an outcast Indian."

"Never you mind, Judge, when it comes meal time you won't forget to get your share of corn pone or fried bacon and coffee either.

"Quite right, Lize," said the judge. "Decidedly," gruffly responded the colonel.

The girl went about her duties, preparing the evening meal for the two men and her father, who, by the way, was as blunt spoken and homely as his daughter.

Colonel Quenten and Judge Long were quite original characters in their way. This was their first trip across the plains.

THE FARMER'S STRATEGY.

A Story of Love and Gunpowder. Farmer Evans walked round his woodpile and surveyed its diminished proportions.

Farmer Evans walked round his woodpile and surveyed its diminished proportions with a considerable lowering of his sluggish eyebrows.

"Somebody's helping themselves," he thought. "I must get to work to discover the offender."

He sat down on a log, rested his elbows on his knees, and after stretching his head a while by way of brightening his ideas.

He settled his temples in the palms of his hands and meditated. His cogitations must have been satisfactory for he rose by and by with a queer smile overpassing his weather-beaten face.

He followed in the step of the ranger. Carefully searched the whole space of ground for a considerable distance.

People from other camps came over to see what the trouble was, and when they learned what had happened great was the anxiety to see where the mysterious shot came from.

But search as they might beyond a few buffalo bones, whitened and dried, rewarded them.

The colonel's wound was not so bad but he could stand watch. The ranger was to be awakened if there were signs of the enemy.

While Lize after carrying her father's body with a blanket, got into the team and sobbed herself to sleep.

"Seen anything?" asked the ranger, when the colonel shook him to let him know that it was his turn to stand watch.

"Nary a ghost, but the hour of midnight is here, and time for such visits, and see'n' as ye are to watch let's rouse the judge and take a smoke.

"Right; and if I don't get winged at short notice I'll let into somebody for certain."

The three men filled their pipes, lighted them, and set down with their rifles cocked, and watched the dim shadows around them.

All was quiet as death, not a sound even from the mules broke the stillness of the mid night hour.

"What is that I hear?" asked the judge, after a long silence. Footsteps are approaching."

"Great Heavens! Look! look!" They all grasped their rifles with one accord, and arose and faced what seemed to them a terrible apparition.

Nor forty yards away, and coming towards them with gigantic strides, was the colossal figure of a man, or what seemed to be a man, clad from head to foot in a long flowing white garment.

It towered above them at least ten feet, while from the place supposed to be the mouth issued a sulphurous light. It carried no weapon that was visible, but hardly had the three faced it when a shot rang out on the night air.

"I'm shot!" exclaimed the ranger, clapping his hand upon his heart; and the consciousness of it sent a ferocious light into his eyes, and he aimed at the figure. His first impulse was to fire high, but on second thought he lowered his rifle to the piece where the feet were supposed to be, and fired.

He missed, but now all the camp were aroused, and seeing the ghostly visitor, sent such a shower of leaden hail into it that, before another minute, the mass of white was seen to waver and totter on its legs, then down it went.

As it fell, the form of an Indian was seen to dart out from the covering and take to his legs.

"That's the ghost himself; the villain is making away—at him boys!" shouted the ranger starting forward.

On they went, until all of a sudden the figure disappeared, seeming to enter the ground. The ranger was near enough to him as to be disappointed to notice that a certain piece of sod wended.

As it may be, he actually saw the Indian disappear into the bowels of the earth, and the sod closed together for a moment to baffle him.

"So that's his trick—the red devil! He has an underground abode. Well, we'll rout him out of that in a jiffy," said the judge.

Suddenly, the ranger placed his feet on a certain spot, the ground gave way, and he was precipitated into a pit some five feet deep—right into the midst of five Indians. Dropping his rifle he drew a bowie-knife, and then commenced a terrific combat at uneven odds; but he was not alone, for nearly a score of rifles were pointing right into the pit, ready to send death through their midst at a second's warning.

TERMS AND TREAT.

—He is a good man indeed who does all the good he talks of. —There has not been a person hanged in Rhode Island since 1810.

—Age respects love, but unlike youth it respects little the signs of love. —Hills not the truth, when you know it, and clothe not the truth in falsehood.

—That laughter costs too much which is purchased by the sacrifice of decency. —Colorado, Kentucky, West Virginia, Delaware and Wisconsin have no State debts.

—The Egyptian Pyramid may be classed under the head of "old mades." —He is richest, who is content with the least; he is poorest, who speaks the language of the wealth of nature.—Socrates.

—It does not follow that a blacksmith has no virtues because he is always to be found at his work. —The light of lightning, and its reflection in the clouds, is a distance of from 150 to 200 miles.

—Out of sixteen establishments which were started for the manufacturing of oleomargarine, thirteen have gone to the wall.

—The failures to express the feelings of a man who is hastening up stairs when he gets to the top thinks there is still another step.

—Bad habits are thistles of the heart and every indulgence of them is a seed that will grow forth a new crop of rank weeds.

—Turn the knob gently, there's a point on the door.—New York News. Walk along softly, we've just washed the floor.

—Suppose I should work myself up to the investigation point?" said Beau to his sweetheart. "I should respond with an exclamation, 'I should be prompt reply."

—More than one half the letters mailed in the month are proved to be in English. The 100,000,000 who speak the English language have far more books and newspapers than all the 1,200,000,000 of the earth.

—Farron: "Sorry to see you sleep so much, Mrs. Jenkins." Mrs. J.: "Sleep, sir? No, sir; I'm sorry; 'I am sure you cannot tell me what my last sermon was about.'" Mrs. H.: "About six."

—Blood Jewels.—The manufactory from pure blood of the Jew is carried in Germany. The blood is dried, reduced to a powder, and then milled and polished. The ornaments it is produced are capable of high polish.

—Paper collars were first patented in 1854, but the 1850 mark was counterfeited. In that year 1,800,000 were manufactured. In 1877, 300,000,000 were made—an average of more than one box for every man, woman and child in the country.

—When placed under a microscope the sting of a bee presents a polish of dazzling beauty, but when placed in the end of a man's nose it takes on the appearance of a rat-tail dipped in silt, and flings out words as rough as a grind stone.

—"I am glad," said an illiterate preacher (that the Lord has opened my mouth to speak)." "And well you may be glad, the rejoinder, "for he would not do such a thing but once before." "And when was that?" asked the preacher. "In Baalam's time," was the conclusive answer.

—The entire amount of gold at present estimated at $7,000,000,000 in value in the United States. Sixteen million tons of this immense sum is hardly comprehensible to the mind, but if it were put in a solid mass it would measure only seven feet high, twenty-eight feet wide, thirty-six feet long.

—When the Sultan loses his temper the ladies of the household speak of him as a harems-scare-crow fellow.

—Swartzmeyer to his wife: "Now see here, mine old, bawser as you had Johnny let a little on you dat candy chest, other der fust bin, but once before." "And when was that?" asked the preacher. "In Baalam's time," was the conclusive answer.

—The value of the land and cows in the United States, employed in farming, including milk, butter and cheese, is estimated to be not less than one billion three hundred million dollars, ($1,300,000,000); and the combined value of butter and cheese produced annually, "three hundred and fifty million dollars," ($350,000,000) or fifty million more than the wheat crop of the country.

—Samuel Scoville, of Norwich, has probably by the innocent means of causing more happiness and more unhappiness than any man in seven centuries. During a residence of seven years in the town he has performed the marriage ceremony of 100 couples; and now he proposes to have a friendly chat with them through the Norwich papers. His head is level.

—Though the papers are at safe distance, the newspapers of the world are full of notices of the various enterprises in the social, dramatic or literary line of business. An important item of news should always be left out to make room for such matters, and an extra reporter detailed to write them up faithfully for a week or two in advance. Then after patronizing the papers in this liberal way, the managers of such social, dramatic or literary enterprises, should they stand in need of any printing in the way of cards, hand-bills or notices, ought to hunt up somebody who does job printing on a second hand printing machine and give him the work of some of the printers who are employed in connection with a newspaper, and nothing more to live upon than the glory of doing homage to Tom, Dick and Harry, and the privilege of naming—free of charge—Harry, Dick and Tom's names, the corner of the Faghorn Minstrels, or the excursion of the Leekawansas Ladies' Excursion to Lake Limpo, or anywhere else. Some unfortunates might think that those who have their printing patronage on the man who does job work with a second hand printing machine should also look to him for their newspaper notices, but this is an unworthy way to take of it, since it would cost the individual nearly ten times the total price of his job work.

—PAT ON THE ROAD. An Irishman driven to desperation by the slowness of the money market and the high price of provisions, procured a pistol and took to the road. Meeting a traveler, he stopped him with:

"Your money or your life!" "Seeing that was grown at the business, the traveler said:

"I'll tell you what I'll do; I'll give you all my money for that pistol."

—FAT REMOVED THE MONEY and handed over the pistol. "Now," said the traveler, "hand back that money so I'll have your brains out."
