Bank (limited). Yet the bank had just declared a fat dividend of 15 per cent for the half year. Share holders were contented, and god Maumon seemed to cast a favorable eye on the welfare of the old and thriving corporation. However, a mutinous feeling of discontent was plainly visible upon the faces of the thirty - odd employees, who swarmed like bees into the bive, every week-day morning, for the purpose of manufacturing the golden produce that delighteth the souls of distributing Directors and radient proprietors. The shoe pinched somewhere. Where was it? The following notice, circulated for the only cating house that deigned to the perusal of each clerk, contained the secret of the unwonted gloom:

The gliding of a little extra pay might have made the pill easier to swallow, but on this point the notice was discreetly reticent. In the end, after a few days of conjecture and excitement, everyone quietly resigned himself to his fate, as black and white slaves are bound to do all the world over.

I had been ten years in the bank, and received a salary which, though not magnificent, was sufficient to support tled by the sudden appearance of the bank cat from the cavernous depths of vein-, my strongest effort of will provmagnineent, was sufficient to support in contort a young wife; and very happy we were in our snug retreat at Wood Green. JACK AT THE PLOW. Jack Boomsby had followed the sea. from the time of early youth to the silvering of his hair, and in the calm evenings of his days, while yet health and strength were left he concluded to settle down on shore, and content him self with a landman's life. He bought a farm, and hired a man to superintend the agricultural department. In fact, he hired a man and wife (he had no wife of his own) to come in and take charge of his establishment, his desire being simply to assure himself a home. He took possession of the farm late in August, purchasing most of the crops of the season just closing, and making ready for square work when spring should open. He had secured a yoke

At the proper time it was the and by Mr. Wood, Jack's factorum, that a certain piece of old mowing land should be broken up preparatory to planting with corn, or potatoes, in spring; so the breaking-up plough was brought forth the oxen yoked op and hitched on, and the old horse January put on the lead. And away they went. The farmer had a little difficulty at first in getting the three animals to pull together to the best advantage; but he was a patient and persevering man; and ere long had

The plough worked finely, turning a good furrow, and Mr. Wood was well Things were thus moving, and all coing well, when a man arrived who had engaged of the overseer some seed wheat, and it became necessary that Mr. Vood should go to the barn and get it out.

"Heave ahead," said Jack, who had been following the team around the field; "I guess I can navigate the plough Mr. Wood didn't think there could be any trouble. He showed his chief just how to hold the plough, and how to keep the reins of the horse in hand. If he kept old January straight, the till you come back." oxen would take care of theyselves. "All right!" cried Jack "A you go. I'll keep this crait on its course, never you fear." And the factotum went away to the barn and gave out the wheat, and while conversing with his friendly customer he was startled by a terrible outery from the field, and thither he hastened with all possible speed to find poor Capt. Jack elinging to the plough handles for dear life, and the whole team a scene of utter demoralization. "Why, Captain," what has happen-

"Happened!" gasped the man of the sea, letting go of the plough and sweep-ing his hand over his brow. "Shiver my timbers, if this ain't a mixed mess!" "But how did it happen?"

"Why, in the first place the critters started to tack-ship on their own ac-count. Into the wind they came all flying, and when they had fairly missed stays they tried to club-haul by throwin' old January out to windw'rd -and over he went on his beam ends Then the starboard ox got over on the port side, and the iarboard ox got fouled in the tangled rigging and away they went stern foremost-the whole ca'aboose—as fast as they could go, to everlastin' smash! Here, take your old illier-stick, and get 'em back on to their course again, if you can. I can handle a ship, but I'm blamed if I can steer such a crazy-headed craft as this is." And thereafter Capt. Jack confined himself to such departments of agriculture as he could manage without danger
