Why then did 1 hesitate to take it? Why did everybody besitate to take it? Why did everybody besitate to take it? For the last seven years and more it had never been let. All the house agents at West End had had it in hand one after another. The terms had been for duced each season that it came into the market, and still there was no finding a tenant for it. Everybody who would the unstret it would even then be cheap to me, with my large family of mother. The entrance being in the rear, all the best rooms had a delightful southern me, with my large family of motherless children. Nevertheless, I do not deny,that af

Nevertheless, everybody having reached the roof, and having looked by the by, which in themselves were rather calculated to provoke investiga

No, it was the very retook no measures to prevent any of my household induiging in speculations. I at least would not direct attention to verse, in all respects, of that long (and still) untenanted abode. I had heard the rumors about the Hyde Park house the matter, as Mr. Gayling did, and often when I had been in London, and my curiosity had always been piqued, so that now, when I wanted just such a house for the season, I determined to go and look at it for myself. Finding all satisfactory, and just as I expected from bottem to top, I was stepping out on the roof with Mr. Crum ble, the agent, and was saying to him:

"Well, I can't conceive why people won't live here," when my cyc fell upon a curious object erected upon the heads at the rear and surrounded by a high railing. It looked like a huge sky light or glass lantern, about ten feet long, three high and three broad. But instead of forming a light for a stair case or room beneath, it seemed to have been built for the purpose of covering another curious object, which occupying nearly the whole of the space under the glass, was plainly visible through it. This was a long white box, resembling a scamen's chest more than any-thing, only much larger. It rested up on four legs or feet, which raised it about a foot from the flat surface of the
