"Does the very best, Namé; but where the harm's you'll never miss the sweetest is stole."

"Suppose my husband had heard you?"

"It is I, Tom dear," I answered sweetly.

"Oh, you naughty Teddy, begone!"

"Golly, Mom!" and repeating the smack he disappeared down the stairway, just as Tom called to know who was there.

"It is I, Tom dear," I answered sweetly.

"And who else?"

"Oh, only Teddy brought up the hot water. Will you get up now before it gets cold?"

Tom said no more, but I saw he was furiously watching me all the time I was dressing. At length he said:

"What sort of a fellow is this Teddy?"

"Oh, Tom," I exclaimed; "the nicest fellow I'm sure when you see him; you'll agree with me that it will be better to displease Eben and keep him instead; you know we were children together."

"My dear Jessie, ain't you a little—I I thought I heard—"

"Ah, yes," I interrupted; "that door does squeak dreadfully. I'm sorry it woke you; but it won't make much difference, for it's time to get up anyway. There, I'm all dressed before you have begun, so I'll go down and get some flowers."

When Tom came down I was in the dining-room arranging my flowers. Teddy standing by me, and as Tom came in he, pretending not to see him, remarked:

"Well, to my thinking, there's not a flower among them half so sweet as you"—then, perceiving Tom, he pulled his forehead and scraped his foot in regular servant style.

"Morning' air; it's the master I pose you are; foin weather, sir, for the time of the year."

Tom looked just funny.

"It seems to me, young man, you don't know your place very well; in future, confine yourself to your own quarters and speak when you're spoken to."

"Shure, I mean no offense, sir."

"Will you go, and without replying?" Tom stormed.

"Why, my dear Tom," I remarked, smiling sweetly, "what a strange dislike you seem to have taken to poor Teddy. I was so in hopes you would like him as I do, and take him in Eben's place."

"If he don't mind what he's about, I'll kick him out of doors."

"The breakfast passed in absolute silence. As we were passing the parlor on our way to the dining-room, I saw Eben, and I made Tom stop to listen.

"It's a fine looking' gal, your Sara Ann and I give you a kiss, I would, inside, if your brith didn't smol so of inguns."

"Inguns, indeed; and who axed you for a kiss? Do you 'spos I'd be wantin' one from the likes of you when I can get them from my better?"

"My better's—and who do you call my better?"

"Shure and isn't the master himself that kisses me every blessed mornin' of his life; and does he spake of inguns—not much."

"The master! Now it's jokin' you are, Sara Ann; do you 'spos I'm fool enough to believe that?"

"Believe it or not, it's the blessed truth I'm telling you. Shure, if anything should happen to the missus, it's not long I'd be scarce here."

"And it's kisser you say he does; well it's quare creature you wimmen are, anyway. Now mind think it disgraceful to kiss and tell, and here you boast of it."

We waited to hear more, but Tom's face was in a blaze, and he took his hat and left without a word or look.

The next morning Teddy and I managed to be in the same place on the stairs where I had seen Tom kiss Sara Ann, and as he opened the door, Teddy kissed me loud enough to be heard all over the house, and then hurried away while I went on to the dining-room. Tom came in presently with an awful frown, which I pretended not to notice, and he said to me, "kiss me, but he pushed me rudely away."

"Why Tom ain't you going to kiss me?"

"Do you think I am blind, Mrs. Wilkins? I saw that Teddy kiss you just now, and it's not the first time either. Do you think I'll stand such doings? No! I'll break every bone in the man's body, if I hang for it, and you shall go home to your mother till you learn to behave yourself."

"Now, my dear Tom, where is the harm in that? I believe in imbibing sweeties wherever I find it; so don't make a mountain out of a molehill."

You should have seen his face when he heard me repeating his own words.

"Look here, Jessie," he said at length, "you've got the best of me, though it was a hard way in giving me my lesson."

"Not more severe than the case required, Tom. I only made you put yourself in my place."

"Well, Jessie, if it filled you with such intense disgust to see me kiss Sara Ann as it did me to see you kiss that confounded Teddy, I don't wonder you were angry."

"Well we talked the matter over at length, and agreed to dismiss both Teddy and Sara Ann giving them a month's wages instead of
