How to Save Liquid Manure.

How to Save Liquid Manure. An inquiry has come to hand in regard to the value of liquid manure—the urine of domestic animals—and the simplest mode of swing it. When it is resollected that it is to the urine in it, that barnyard manure chiefly ower its fertilizing properties both ar-regards nitrogen and sale, the value of liquid excrementory matter will be appro-clated. Some of the meat eminent authori-ties deny that there is any svailable nitro-gen in horse manure. In 100 pounds of barnyard manure when it has been fromer-erly careed for, as has been found by a malr--related for as has been for a for as the reply is a manufactory they for the horizon for as maltafactory they erly cared for, as has been found by analy-sis, there are 65 pounds of water. Of the re-maining 35 pounds 25 are inert enronescus matter, leaving but 10 per cent. of inorganic substances an 0.6d of nitrogen as true for-tillising matters. This, it must be borne in mind, is based upon good manure, and not such as has been from the good manure, and not such as has been from the good manure, and not such as has been from the good manure, and not such as has been from the good manure, and not such as has been through com stables and statement to the effect that, in view of the d.f. such as has been thrown from stables and subjected to sun and rain which drive out and leach out about everything which will -2he subortities of the French Cables and leach out about everything which will cause a plant to grow, leaving little or noth-ing that is soluble. But urine, rotted with water contains a large quantity of nitrogen, in consequence of the discovery of a flaw in the
