NEW YEAR'S EVE.

BY ALBERT TAYLOR.

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,

The flying obol, the frosty light,

The year is dying in the night;

Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

Ring out the old, ring in the new;

Ring, happy bells, across the sky;

The year is going, let him go;

Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the grief that saps the mind,

For those that here we see no more;

Ring out the feud of rich and poor;

Ring out the old, ring in the new;

Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the old, ring in the new;

Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the old, ring in the new;

Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the old, ring in the new;

Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the old, ring in the new;

Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the old, ring in the new;

Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the old, ring in the new;

Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the old, ring in the new;

Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the old, ring in the new;

Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the old, ring in the new;

Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the old, ring in the new;

Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the old, ring in the new;

Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the old, ring in the new;

Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the old, ring in the new;

Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the old, ring in the new;

Ring out the false, ring in the true.

"At the Eleventh Hour."

BY NOEL MITCHELL.

In the village of Homedale, on the Hudson,

The shades of evening had fallen, and the hills were preparing to wrap themselves in hooded gray.

That night whistlers to the dying day were upon the coast. The shadows of the mountains deepened, their tops were dark.

purple in the twilight. Now and then a star came down in the dark-blue sky, shimmering like rose-diamonds. When that Oh, it was the hour of heart-ache, when that throb of pain called "life" was cast aside and forgotten.

In the bed chamber of a neatly white-washed cottage, that stood on the out skirts of the village of Homedale, sat a man beside a bed, his rough, coarse, brown hands clasping the thin, white, waxen fingers of a woman, who, gasping for breath, lay upon her back, her eyes closed, while her lips, as she caught at her breath, seemed to murmur a name.

The man was not aged, he might have been but fifty, but grief had cast its terrible shadow upon him, and his forehead was wrinkled, his eyes sunken and his form bent.

He said no word, he made no sign, but with his hollow eyes bent upon the floor, he clasped the woman's hand, as if he were broken by the linking of a noisy clock and the gasping of the woman.

She was young, airy, and beautiful. Her hair, dark as the blackbird's wing, lay across the snowy pillow in vast silken masses. Her face, despite its emaciation, was a delicate oval; her brows were exquisitely penciled, her nose and mouth were absolutely faultless.

She did not open her eyes, but kept them closed.

"Water!" she gasped, at length.

"Then the man, gently putting aside the waxen hand, stepped over to a bureau, and pouring out some water from a brown earthenware-pitcher into a tumbler, offered it to the girl. She opened her eyes. They were large, lustrous, heavy-lidded, and of that blue which in some lights assumes the color of the violet.

"How soon am I to die?" she asked, after a half-painful effort, swallowed a few drops of the cooling beverage which her father had prepared for her.

"Fush, Nellie, don't talk that way."

"Nellie, I can talk no other way. Am I to die to-night?"

"Doctor Blyther gives hopes."

The girl impatiently turned her head from side to side on the pillow.

"Doctor Blyther does not trifle with me!" she said.

At this moment the doctor entered.

The girl turned her lustrous eyes up upon him. Her words now came slowly but each word loud.

"Doctor Blyther, father tells me that you give him hopes of me; if you do you lie!"

"My dear Nellie," began the physician, a fat, fussy little man.

"You lie!" she repeated, with horrible emphasis.

"Let me feel your pulse, Miss Nellie."

"If it's for the purpose of telling me how soon I am to die, and with a strength of which he did not deem her capable, she stretched forth her arm.

The doctor took the wrist, and held his fingers on the pulse for some time.
