THE FISHER MAIDEN. Translated from the German of Heine,

The maiden with eyes so dreamy, Thou child of the waves and spray, My home is healds the ocean. Where the surf and the breakers play ; Come sit thee down here beside me And list to the words I may.

My heart is a stormy ocean !-And out on its rocky slopes The turbulent billows are flinging The spars, and the keels, and the ropes;-They are wrecks of my aspirations, The wrecks of my ruined hopes ! My heart is an angry ocean : The gales, as they come and go,

Do strew it with wreeks and ruin ;-

But down in its light waves low The shells and the pearls and corais Do glitter and gleam and glow. Wilt thou launch on this stormy ocean Thou child of the waves and spray? It will float thee securely forever, Wherever thy bark may stray, Till the crimson of life's last twilight Shall tade in the west away -Ironquill, Ft. Scott, Eas.

"Hush, my child, mamma will not let you die. No, darling, you shall have many sleigh rides yet before you die." "No, not many, mamma; if I could have just one it would be so nice." A little girl who had seen the snow come and go nine times lay dying in her humble one on St. Antoine street. Weeks and weeks the fever had burned within her and its fierce fire showed itself in the deep blue eyes and her levely, innocent face. The mother, an ever-constant watcher at the sufferer's pillow, had never given up hope, but the child, with that knowledge which seems to come to all before knew that she would never join her merry playmates over on the school ground. Day by day as the fever burned she had wished for the snow to come, and when the white flakes fell the soft, white folds; a brilliant color on her cheek, lending new luster to her eyes; fair of love and despair from her fever-parched child's position that she might, unwarned, catch the first glimpse of the fleecy snow, girlish happiness.
