The out look of the anthracite coal trade from this point to the end of the year is good. The Pottsville Miner's Journal of the 29th ultino says: "The heavy buyers are slow in their movements, purchasing only up to the line of their actual necessities, waiting and hoping for a break in prices, as is their uniform custom early in the season, especially when prices are stiff. It is this action which, while it does not change the volume of the trade, makes it very irregular, by his name, after which a third vote was throwing much the heavier portion in the taken, as follows: fall months, and continuing it even in the winter when the collieries ought to have a rest. There is not much at present upon which to build a hope that prices will be out of $500. any more favorable a month or three onths hence than at present; indeed, the udications all point to higher prices. They are now only fairly remunerative, and have been brought up to that point solely by last senson's judicious policy of concert of action. It is not likely that with the bit er experience of 1879, resulting from want of co-operation, there will be a disposition to change the programme this year. Those who are holding off for a break will, therefore, be likely to discover their error when they have to add 25 cents a ton to the present market price."
