The controversy which has been going on etween the two fections of the Republican Gon. Garfield's nomination was thought of, and not to create them." It had its inception in foisting upon the people a fraudu'ent Alministration, whose head placing him in a position, which a clear majurity of the people at the polls had said the rankest fraud was made President, to pave the way for the return of Gen. Grant to the White House, but he failed to earry him what he was and Gen. Garfield was so fortunate as to secure the prize. Naturally men whose candidate for President, first,last and all the time, is Grant. The receon for man, with as keen a desire to be his own successor, as was ever possessed by any of his predecessors, and to yield up to the Grant wing of the party, a wast amount of official patronage would be equivalent to signing a ouit claim deed of the position he has been elected to occurry for four years, and which he hopes to be able to occupy for four years more, after his present term expires.

A politician without patronage is power less. We see this clearly illustrated in the present position of ex-Senator Conkling. With magnificent abilities and a personality that had until recently commanded the ut most deference and carried everything before it, this once powerful leader of the Republiean party, whose word was law and whose every wish was carefully consulted, as now almost w thout a fellowing. While be could command place and power for politicians they followed fawningly at his heels only o willing to do his bidding. Garfield and the coterie that surrounds him are trained politicians, who understand the potent pow er of patronage, and looking after the loaver and fishes of the future, as to the fat susten ance of the present, readily saw the way to maks their most powerful opponent an un important factor in the political problem-Their success in demolshing Conkling, has been greater than they had anticipated and they awe it more particularly to the fact that the great New Yerker, with unlounded faith in himself, had failed to appreciate that it was not his mental abilities that won him support, but the lucrative positions he was able to procure for his political friends.

The "bread and butter brigade" is one bundred thousand strong, and it can always thousands of hermetically sealed up hou es they derive their living. While Gen.
