Fowls which have to shift for themselves are not likely to return much money for their owners. -Fowls should be moderately fed at first after a long journey, and with soft food. When half starved from long abstinence there is danger of over eating if allowed a l Ban they want. Shippers of fancy fowls should provide food for them on the passage, and X then this danger will be partially obvinted. -A certain poultry writer says that fowls S should "never have wheat, rye or cats sown for forage," but fails to tell why. One who has sown a good deal of grain for this very Le purpose is unable even to guess why this practice should be condemmed. Fowls are themselves pretty good judges of what is good for them. -A victim of the chicken fanciers save he set punctured eggs, half boiled eggs and all sorts of bad eggs at two dollars a dozen. In this connection, I desire to call the at-cention of the people to my ample facilities in not get in with their fact. The patent earthen fountains are good except that they break on very alight provocation, or freeze up and burst in winter. A trough so guarded that the fowls can only reach the water with their bills is admirable, and much the same arrangement is useful for soft feed. - Caponizing young roosters is often very profitable, but only experts should attempt it. These must gain there definess first by close observation of the lowl anatomy, then practicing on freshly-killed chickens, and then by lessons from a professional. An inexperienced operator cannot safely be tolerated. Give all such a wide berth. Experts do their work at ten cents apiece, we

-For profit don't keep old fowls year after year, except for extraodinary merits. Some few old heps are famous mothers, and are worth keeping we that account sometimes. But as a rule work them off in two years or so. -A dozen eggs that weigh 3 pounds can be considered good weight. We sometimes read of such eggs, and because there is more "merit" in them than in ordinary eggs they should bring more money, yet some people say "eggs are eggs."
