SOMEBODY'S MOTHER.

The woman was old, and ragged, and gray, and bent with the chill of the winter's day The street was wet with the recent snow, The street was wet with the recent show, And the woman's feet were siged and flow. She stood at the crossing and waited long Alone, uncared for amid the throng, Of human beings who passed her by,", None headed the glasse of her anatious eye. Down the street with laughter and shout, Glad in the freedom of "school let out." Came the boys, like a flock of sheep, Halling the snow piled white and deep. Past the woman so old and gray, Rastened the children on their way, Nor offered a helping hand to her, So meek, so timid, afraid to stir Lest the carriage wheels, or the horse's fee Should crowd her down in the slippery street At last came one of the merry troop, ignorant of the actual engagement, but when she wrote and told us that Brastome was engaged to Sir Somebody Something's daughter, and bad just inherited his uncle's property quite unexpectedly, it was a terrible blow to us all at home. Yet there were his letters full of affection.

Agnes bore up wonderfully, but at ngth even she succumbed. We had heard nothing from Fred very lately and my inquiries only elicited the statement that he had gone al road suddenly. Even our neighbors the Pendrewitts, at whose house Agnes had first met him, were away yachting, and we could not get at the truth. I wrote to his bankers and got his address, and then wrote to him (a stiffish letter) for an explanation, and vaited.
