sprate system and the rate sector water Live Stock Trade of 1851, and Gue of its Lessons.

Great hopes were awakened in 1830, of an immense European demond for our Live Beef Cuttle, for the substant of reason that New York City shinped about $5,408 live bullocks, and $10,486 quarters of fresh dressed heef in 1880, against 35.205 live cattland $55,116 dressed quarters in 1870. The anticipations for 1581 have not been realized ; the exports, instead of advancing, have fallon back to 38,923 live beeves, and 287,-302 dressed quarters, and the shippers also claim to have lost money. This has not come from loss of popularity of American fresh heef in Great Britian or on the contrment, for it has steadily grown in favor.

There are thing or lour causes for the de cline, which happily will not be permenent, for ft is undoubtedly true that our broad western pastures, with unlimited supplies of fattening corn, in average years, c.n produce fresh ment, and put it in the markets of Great Britian and some other European markets at lower rates than it can possibly be produced on their limited areas of high prie'd land. Three of the reamns for the decline area

First, owing to a succession of bad grain sensors, the British agriculturists turned their attention more to live stock, and the past year there was femporarily a much larger supply of home-raised meat. This may continue during 1982, for though inereased attention is again given to wheat and other grain, on account of the more encouraging crop of 1881, and the great advance of breadstuffs, this will not operate at mee upon stock farming.

Second, the depressed condition of farming and manufacturers left far loss resources among the masses abroad for larying meat, while the boom in business, the higher wages and better employment in our country, largely increased the home comumntion of all meats, and especially there of better shipping quality. This advanced the average whelesale price of beef in New York fully ten per cent. over 1880, and of shipping grades still more, and which readerod exporting less profitable.

Third, superior qualities of beef can slone mpate in the foreign markets, and only these grades can ever be shipped at a prfit, ne a rule. But the supply of such heaf, and of good mutton, is quite limited in this country, the great mass of cattle being "natives," yielding only metium quality meat. The demand for shipping in 1850, led to a gathering up from all over our country, of all available cattle of the higher grades, foeluding many that would have ordinarily have been kept for another year's growth and feeding. So, during 1891 there was scarcely more of such cattle to be had than were required by our own increased consumption of this class.

The lesson indicated above is one we have often urged, and it is now enforced by the results, viz: the importance of greatly increased and immediate efforts to raise th quality of cattle in all our western pasta: fields. Texas cattle will contine to be driven to the northern and mid-region pasture and, if well fed, will supply a fair quality meat for ordinary house But all western breeders, and those of Texas as well, should stare neither effort nor expense to secure at once the size of every calf to be grown, a thorough bred or high-grade Shorthorn, or other improved breed. It will pay every way. A Shorthorn steer will at east grow as much, and be samature, a three years old, as a native at four years old -a gain of a whole year's feeding and time and interest, and quite enough to warrant a high rate for the service of a good sire. Then the higher market price which th better animals bring, with the same expens for care, freight, commissions, etc., will pay another large premium.

It comes to just this : intelligent, enter prising farmers and stockmen can not afford to grow ordinary animals. They had better sell off a part of a herd and put th avails into hetter breading blood-bloo that will soon raise the quality of the bal auce of their bends. The supply of highgrade bulls is still limited, and the prices high, but when a single bull will in a year produce a hundred or more progony that will, by saving of time, and by greater value at two or three years old, be worth 210 t $40 more per head than the average up tives, any one can see the advantage of se curing such animals at almost any cost. When one smaller farmer, or stock miser, can not meet the expense, several can com bine and procure one or more animals for CONTRACTOR LEAST.

While the price of all cattle sold in Ney York markets during 1881 has averaged a wills over 10 cents per pound for the est mated weight of the dressed quarters, the lower grades have sold at times even below 7 cents, and the best grades up to 13 and 14 cents and above, with the ce mated dressed weight greatly in favor of the bet for unlimits.-Ourson Jupp, in America Agriculturist, for Foisenary,
