HELP BETTER THAN PITY. I have seen a blind man walking Along the busy street.

Before night the bargain was closed. Spellman liked it all very well except the house he was to live in.

I have seen the little orphan I left without a mother's care.

I have heard the words of sorrow That the neighbors had to spare.

I have heard the school-boy sighing O'er his lessons home from school.

I have seen the words of pity That his brother lips supplied.

I have seen a little two-year old Crying by a brook.

Lay the treasure book aside, Lilt the little fellow gently.

Old let the pity lead to action, For the world is full of need.

Let us ever act as brothers, Ne'er with pity be content.

Always doing good to others, For the world is full of need.

Though the pity may be useful, 'Tis but little 'tis all.

There are more applicants than places," replied the downcast husband.

"I know, dear; but your very next effort may meet with success."

"Perhaps so; I will at least try once more."

"No," replied Spellman; "I am out of work and can buy nothing until I can get a job."

"What kind of work can you do?" "I was raised as a farmer, but for the last five years have been at work in a shop in this city."

"Well, if you can come well recommended, I do not doubt that you can get a situation to work for a gentleman farmer who only sends his servants in the country."

"Water does he live?" "Oh, about five miles out of the city. I am going out home in about two hours, and you can ride out with me to see him, if you wish."

"All right, I will be here. But first, what wages will he give?" "Five or a family?" "Yes, wife and two children."

"Well, I think he would give you twenty or twenty-five dollars a month, horse-rent, and a small garden."

the country to live, and told him to be sure to make a bargain with the man.

SCIENTIFIC MISCELLANY. Recent "finds" are thought to throw a new light on the history of the Swiss lake-dwellers.

M. Brasse has tested the preservative property of hydrocyanic acid, the result of finding the bodies of animals poisoned with it.

The size of the rose-bush at Hildesheim, Hanover, believed to be more than a thousand years old.

The velocity of the wind is much greater at high altitudes than on the earth, due probably to the resistance of the uneven surface of the earth.

"We will have to rent it," said Spellman to his wife, "if we go there."

"Then sell it, Priscilla." "We could not get half we gave for it, Edward, and how could I live without it?"

"Then what is to be done? We can get neither that nor half the other things into the hut." "For my part I wish we had not bought so many things."

"I have known her rise up quickly, Lay the treasure book aside, Lilt the little fellow gently."

WANTED. A clergyman can preach three sermons consecutively without mentioning Galilee.

A man who will refrain from calling his friends speech a "happy effort."

A woman who remembers last Sunday's text, but is unable to speak understandingly of the trimmings on the bonnet of the lady in the pew next in front.

An editor who never feels pleased to have his good things credited, or mad when they are stolen.

A pencil that is always in the first pocket you put your hand into.

A married man who never said "No wonder the girls don't get married nowadays; they are altogether different from what they were when I was a girl."

A converted brother who does not exaggerate his forsaken wickedness when relating his experiences.

A person, age or sex immaterial, who does not experience a flush of pride upon being thought what he is not and never goes to bed.

A button on the male garment that never comes off except when the person whose mission in life is to sew buttons on is not at hand with her needles.

A woman who when caught in her second dress will make an apology for her dreadful appearance.

THE SMALL BOY CRITICISES. The "small boy" is a ruffian in his way. One can easily imagine the confusion of the poor mother whom the Boston Transcript places in the following perplexing position:

"It was in the cars. The ladies were sitting together, nicely engaged in conversation. On the seat facing them sat a little five-year-old boy. He had been looking out of the window, apparently absorbed in the moving panorama of the outside world."

"I don't see the man with the bald head and funny red nose." "The 'old' was repeated. By this time the car was in a titter, save and excepting one elderly gentleman with a very bald head and red nose."

"Oh! now I see him. Ho! what a bright nose. What makes it so red, mamma?" "George!" shouted his mother in a stage whisper. But George was not to be stopped.

"Mamma," he continued, "what made you say he had a lighthouse on his face?" "A light house?" "Yes, mamma, and this time with a light on it."

Once more the piping voice, the bald-headed passenger, glared at his paper more fiercely than ever and growling under every moment.

"Mamma, I don't think his head looks like a State house dome. It's shiny like that, but it isn't so yellow."

While the titter went round again, George's mother whispered to the boy and gave her hopeful a box on the ear, which seemed to partly divert his attention from the bald-headed passenger, but not entirely. He cried once through his tears.

"You said his nose was as red as a beet, mamma; I didn't say nothing." "Strange to say, the bald-headed passenger didn't take part in the suppressed laughter that followed, but he put on his hat and hid his nose in the paper, over which he glared at his boy, as if he wanted to eat him. And yet, where was the boy to blame?"
