Our New York Letter.
Regular correspondence of ADVOCATE.
NEW YORK, Sept. 6, 1882.

Having occasion the other day to try and hunt up a missing letter, I came across the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service and was interested in learning something about the general subject and also about the vast number of complaints which reach the New York post-office as to letters lost or gone astray.

It is but a few years since the mails were carried on railroad trains, in a sort of haphazard way, the contracts for compensation being given out to a corporation and then having no supervision except in a vague and unsatisfactory way.

Now the postal cars—their construction, running, general management and the work done on every trip—are so closely looked after as if they were local post-offices, and if a letter can be shown to have been dropped in a collection box, and subsequently delayed, it can be traced, step by step, until the cause, place and time of delinquency are pointed out.

In a very large majority of cases of letters going astray the fault is that of the sender in not properly addressing them. A day or two ago a United States Senator made vigorous and highly indignant complaint because a very important business letter had not been received by the party to whom he had addressed it.

Search was begun for the letter and it was soon found at a town in New York having the same name as that which it was designed to reach. The Senator had put "N. Y." in place of "N. J." and to New York it had properly gone.

The Superintendent of the Railway Service has a busy time of it in the winter when snow and storm may delay trains and make connections for mails, but it is equally trying in summer when increased mail facilities must be arranged for all prominent watering-places. All complaints have to be sifted down and investigated, and the Superintendent is equally sure that whatever he may decide, he will be denounced by somebody as totally unfit for his place.

"SPECIALTY JOURNAL."
It will hardly be credited, but there are printed and published, in New York City, nearly 300 papers and magazines, besides the system of working large farms with the most improved machinery and a large force of men.

It is not an unusual thing in the valleys mentioned to see corn 3 ft. 10 in. or 200 ears, stretching a row from the railroad in one unbroken mass of green and yellow. Corn and wheat are kings. From Mr. Piny L. Barlette I learn that the value of the former product in 1880, was $25,000,000, and of the latter $21,000,000, which is more than two-thirds of the total valuation of the crops of the State for that year.

Two other crops, now important features of Kansas farming, are sorghum and rice. Sorghum is raised in great quantities and is also rapidly taking a front rank. Of the soil and general characteristics of Kansas, as an agricultural State, I could say much that is already known to those of your readers who are interested in the subject. It is certainly a great State and there are still opportunities in it for earnest men who are willing to work and begin at the beginning.

The geographical position of the State is such as to exempt it from the extremes and protracted cold of the North, as well as the intense summer heat of the South. The average temperature is about 53 degrees Fahrenheit. There is little wind in winter, but in summer there is a prevailing breeze from the South, usually a cool, dry wind. The comparatively high altitude of the State, together with its perfect system of river drainage, and the entire absence of swamps, or marshy land, renders the atmosphere here at all times electrically dry and invigorating.

The expression "as windy as Kansas" has become a by-word in some places and undoubtedly there it has the peculiarities of this character. A citizen of the State, now a U. S. Senator, once wrote concerning it: "Kansas is all anthesis. It is the hottest, coldest, driest, wettest, thickest, thinnest country of the world. The stranger who crosses our borders for the first time at Wyandotte and traveled by rail to White Cloud would, with consternation, contrast that unintermitted series of rugged and caked ergs with the placid prairies of his imagination. Let him ride along the spine of any of those lateral 'divides' or water-sheds whose

"Level leagues forsaken lie
A grassy waste, extending to the sky," and he would be oppressed by the same metastable monotony which broods over those who yawn the reading horizon over the desolating plains of the sea.

And let this discourse be whiter if, would, if he listened to the voice of experience he would not start upon his pilgrimage at any season of the year without an overcoat, a fan, a lightning-rod and an umbrella. There is probably no place on the continent where Puritan ideas have projected themselves into the future with more definiteness than in Kansas. The Kansas of a few years ago in the wild frontier days when men died at all hours of the day and night with their boots on, is not the Kansas of today.

But this is rather in the nature of a digression from the main scope of these letters. My next will be devoted exclusively to Colorado observations. Among the notable characters I have come across here in Denver is Mike Myhove, a news agent, and the richest one in the country without doubt. He is supposed to be worth $50,000, which he has invested in Denver real estate. He is not yet ready, however, to retire from business, but from early morning until midnight may be seen upon the streets crying, "Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis and Kansas City morning papers." In connection with his paper stand he has a bookish chair, which he generally leaves in charge of an assistant. He sells his papers at a uniform price of ten cents each, and long experience has made him very expert in detecting at a glance from what part of the country any one of the strangers who
