FARMERS' COLUMN.

Plant Growth Viewed as to Time.

DR. HALSTAD.

Plants are arranged in three groups as to their period of existence, namely: Annual, biennial, perennial, that is, whether they live for one, two, or more than two years. The natural beginning of a seed-bearing plant is the growth from the seed, or germination. The early life of all plants in the three groups is very much the same. It is an enlargement of the embryo, or young plantlet, that was formed in the seed before it was separated from the mother plant. This first growth is at the expense of food that was packed away with the embryo, either within or around its thickened seed leaves, and both the plant and the food that is to nurish its first growth are surrounded by protective coverings, called the seed coats. Germination, though a complicated chemico-vital process, is in essence the forcing of the young plant from its surrounding coverings, and the establishment of itself in the soil and the sunshine. This is a process that is common to all plants that grow from seeds. The beginning of an independent existance is the formation of a seed, and with the seeds the cycle is completed. The aim of every plant is the multiplications and perpetuation of its kind, and as the seed is the common form in which plant units are cast off, it is clear that in the formation of seed we have the end towards which vegetation tends.

In the annual plant the whole round of life is completed in a single year, it germinates, develops its system of roots, stems and leaves, produces its flowers and perfects its offspring—the seed, all within the compass of a single year. With this work done the old plant dies. In the biennial the method is somewhat different. The first year is devoted to the work of accumulating material out of which the plant makes its seeds the following year. Compared with the annual there is an unusual development of roots and foliage, and towards the end of summer, a storing up of a large amount of concentrated food in some part of the plant. Contrast the barely plant with its short life of a few months, and simple straightforwardness in all its processes, with the carrot, turnip or beet, which has a large root system and many leaves, for the first year, and accumulation of starch, sugar, etc., in the main root, at the end of the season. No seeds have been formed, and the end of the plant's existance has not been reached. The next season the fleshy root sends up a flower stem, and the store of organic matter starch, etc., that was made the previous season is used up in the formation and perfecting a large number of seeds. The original plant loses its life in the production of many offspring of seeds.

In the third class is included all of our trees and shrubs, and a vast number of herbs that are known by the general term of perennials. They grow on from year to year, and in most cases have no definite time in which to complete the cycle. The first year of the young tree, maple or oak, materially different from that of the annuals oats or biennial beet, its time for getting ready for the production of seed is lengthened out through several years. After the time for the bearing of offspring has come, centuries may pass before death ensues, in each year of which, if conditions are favorable, seeds may be formed. The process may be so slow that more than a single season is required for the perfection of a seed. —Agriculturist.

Notes on Corn and Fodder Corn.

Corn, over a large part of the country, is late in ripening, and though we should take no risk of being touched by frost before cutting up, yet many will take it. Simply cutting, however, before the frost will save the fodder, even though it be cut after sundown of the night of a heavy frost. The last week in September ought to see the corn all cut and stacked, over a large part of the country.

Husking.—There is no farm work in the dollar of which there is so much difference in men as in this. One man will husk 90 bushels while another is husking one. Employ good huskers, and pay them by the bushel, if possible. See personally that the handles of stalks are well bound and stacked, if they are to be left in the field.

Seed corn should be saved while husking, if not before. Take one perfect ear from stalks bearing two or more, throwing it to one side with the husk attached. A perfect ear has all rows perfect, a small butt end, the cob well tipped out with grain and covered with husks, and kernels uniform and well ripened.

Corn cribs.—It is best, of course, to have rat-proof cribs, but "rat pen" cribs are just as good for the corn, if well covered with boards or a straw roof. Chickens and turkeys will steal a little, and rats and squirrels have a fine chance at it, but what the poultry take is not lost, and the vermin can be kept down by cats and terriers.

The price of corn is likely to rule high, and it is certainly worth while to prevent all loss of this valuable food by unusual care.

Fodder corn.—Though ensilling may take place at any time before frost, the successful curing of corn fodder can only be done after the nights are cool, if not cold. It should stand until about the time of the first frosts before cutting, and, large stocks, to remain until the ground freezes.—Agriculturist.

Late Sowing of Wheat.

On a rich soil, winter wheat may be sown with good results up to the middle of October in many localities. The main point is to have the plants well rooted before freezing sets in. The time of putting in grain may be regulated somewhat by the character of the seed bed, its richness, mellowness and depth of culture. Late sowing has this in its favor, that it helps to escape the ravages of the Hessian fly which often is very destructive to early sown wheat. Any quick acting manure is of special value on wheat sown this month, as it stimulates the young plants at once to rapid growth. Tons any salt of ammonia or nitric acid, furnishes valuable nitrogen at once, and 150 pounds of either of these salts per acre may double the crop.

PATENTS

obtained for Inventors in the United States Canada and Europe, at reduced rates. With our principal office located in Washington, directly opposite the United States Patent Office, we are able to attend to all patent business with greater promptness and despatch and at less cost than other patent attorneys who are at a distance from Washington, and who have, therefore, to employ "associate attorneys." We make preliminary examinations and furnish opinions as to patentability, free of charge, and all who are interested in new inventions and patents are invited to send for a copy of our "Guide for obtaining Patents," which is sent free to any address, and contains such information as to obtain patents and other valuable matter. We refer to the German-American National Bank Washington, D. C.; the Royal Swedish & Norwegian and Danish Legations, at Washington; Hon. Jos. Casey, late Chief Justice U. S. Court of Claims; to the Officials of the U. S. Patent Office, and to Senators and Members of Congress from every State.
