NEARER HOME.

When the year has lived its summer, And the birds have touched their struts, And full ripe for the keen sickle...

When I, wandering wares the summer Lingered fondly to the last, See the fairest flowers withered...

And when sunset fades old coldly And the barren fields look gray, The last golden fruits all gathered...

Where no frost hath ever brightened The bright verdure of the elm, And the fairest fruits are ripened...

And my waning spirit avenge In a soft and hopeful tone, Till the stars shine down to light me...

GETTING INTO SOCIETY. "I tell you, Jack, the farm is not your vocation. I become more and more convinced of the fact every day, and less contented with the life we are leading."

Breakfast was over, and we stood on the farmhouse piazza "arm in arm. On the sill sat baby, screaming with delight...

Our breakfast had been a delicious one—office chair as amber, bread like snow, and steak done to a turn.

All about us was a green glaze of sweetbrier and honeysuckle; the sun was just rising above the mountain peaks, and the morning air was sweet and fresh...

I felt a vague sort of conviction that Jack had but little sympathy with my spirit of discontent; yet I was determined to carry my point if possible.

"You are dissatisfied with your lot—I see that plainly, Nell," said Jack, a trifle sadly.

"Oh, nonsense!" I put in. "Not with my lot, nor with you, only with the farm, Jack. I'm tired to death with this prosy, humdrum life, and I hate to see you delving and toiling like a slave from one year's end to another."

"We must try and save up a little now, Jack, somehow are fixed so nicely," I said, feeling somewhat terrified at his growing recklessness.

"Pshaw, child! You ever heard of a banker's clerk saying anything. If we make both ends meet it will be more than I look for."

"My dear, said Mrs. Vanborough, when we were pleasantly settled in our handsome house and had hired a couple of servants—"I suppose you will want to give some sort of a party now, Nell."

"I mentioned the matter to Jack when he came home, and he entered into the spirit of the affair with great excitement."

"To be sure, my little wife, have a party by all means. When one's in Rome, one must do as the Romans do, you know. Don't spare any expense either, my dear; we must make a good show as other people."

"I'm not overfond of society, Nell," he was speaking a great deal of money.

"Oh, well, never mind. It will go, anyhow, one way or the other, and we might as well enjoy it. You've always wanted to get into good society, Nell, and you're fairly in now, and it won't do to let people see that you are cramped for money."

"My heart ached a little; and in the midst of all the flare and flutter of preparation, I was conscious of a vague feeling of regret when I recalled the quiet months of my early widowhood at Cherry Hill. Jack had seemed such a different person in those days—so strong and steady and self-reliant; and now he seemed to take as much pleasure in life's trivialities as I did."

"I'm aware of that, Jack, but we've enough for a start, and Vanborough offers you a good place in the bank."

"At a limited salary, Nell."

"Oh, yes, but you can work your way up, Jack; right up to the topmost round of the ladder. Do let's go, Jack! I've lived here to please you ever since our marriage; I think you can afford to please me a little now."

Jack sighed as he looked out upon his ripening grain fields, but he drew me close to his heart and kissed me.

"That's true," he said; "you can't be expected to care for the farm as I do."

The winter that followed was exceedingly gay. We were invited everywhere, and our house was constantly filled with guests. Balls, soirees, letter-dramas and the opera, seemed to engross every hour.

When spring came our last surplus dollar had been expended, and we were wholly dependent on Jack's monthly salary.

The warm weather came on, and baby fell ill. I hoped day by day that Jack would say something about going back to his father's for the summer, but he did not even hint at such a thing.

The days grew longer and warmer. The sun shone down with a pitiless splendor, and the paved streets seemed like heated brass.

"Oh, Jack, no!" I sobbed out in my remorse and despair. "I won't go to the seashore, you see how ill baby is. Oh, Jack, ask your father to let us return home."

"Oh, you wouldn't be satisfied, Nell, if we went back. It is dreadfully stupid down there these summer days, with the haymaking, and the reaping, and all that sort of thing. We should never be able to endure it now."

"I said no more. The long, bright, burning days wore on, and our bills ran up higher and higher, and our baby's little breath seemed to grow weaker and weaker, and poor Jack himself began to look dreadfully ill and worn."
