A Bosron preacher says that nothing gives such a complete index to the charnoter of man as the substance he spreads upon his icy sidewalk in front of his bonse. He who uses sifted ashes is a strict utilitarian, precise and bard in his ideas, without much sentiment, and prone to look to the end to be gained without much thought of the gracefulness or the beauty of the means employed. He who takes ashes, half-burned goal, and incombustible slag out of his grate, and pitches the whole promiscuously over his sidewalk, is a man who really cares, nothing for the safety of other people's limbs. He who covers the slippery places with sawdust, which seems to afford a footing, but does not, is cynical and malevolent. He who strews the glassy pave with sand so judiciously heated that it sticks to the ice without melting it is refined and nice in his tastes, sympathetic in his disposition, and bulging with philauthropy.
