KEEP NOTHING FROM MOTHER.

At times the young voice broke in song That was wonderfully sweet; And the mother's heart best deep and calr For her joy was most complete.

There was many a hely lesson, Interwoven with silent prayer: laught to her gentle, listening child, As they two sat spinning there.

And of all that I speak, my darling, From my older head and heart, God giveth me one lest thing to say, And with it thou must not part,

Thou wilt listen to many voices, And ab ! wee that this must be ! The song of praise and the voice of love And the voice of flattery.

But listen to me, my little one. There's one thing that thou must fear-Let never a word to my love be said Which her mother may not hear.

No matter how true, my darling one, The words may seem to thee, They are not fit for my child to hear If they cannot be told to me,

If then'lt ever keep thy young heart pure And thy mother's heart from fear, Bring all that is said to thee by day At night to thy mother's ear.'

village as can be. There are few houses in it; and the congregation that gathered every Sunday at the parish church came chiefly from the farms that were scattered broadcast over the country.

The vicar was the Rev. Herbert Gardner, and he was the happy father of some half a dozen children, the eldest of whom, Mattie, was a charming girl of twenty. There was little society in the village, and Mattie's chief ideas of the world at large were drawn from the occasional visits she made to a relative who lived in the neighboring' country town. Still, though she was homely and unsophisticated, there was none of that affected simplicity you so often see in girls. She was a frank, fearless, outspoker girl, full of life and spirits, and never so happy as when rambling about the old vicarage garden, picking basketfuls of ro ea for some sick boy or girl and carrying them with sunshine into some dark-

From that day it began to dawn on Mattie's heart that here was one man who had missed her when she was absent and who tried to keep her out of danger. And little by little thir thought grew rigger and took root, until there came a sort of echo to it, which said, "I miss bim, too. I wish he had not to risk his life by going to see fever cases."

And from that day there was less cordial friendship and there was more shy reserve in her intercourse with the doctor. And sometimes Dr. Robertson did not know what to make of it, and one vening be said:
