[FROM OUR REGULAR CORRESPONDENT.] WASHINGTON Feb. 12, 1883. The social activity of the capital, after a short but most brilliant season, was brought to a close with the events of the last week. The early advent of Lent this year reduces fashionable society som what prematurely to sackcloth and ashes but the retirement cannot be unwelcome, for the votaries of pleasure are among the hardest tollers in Mother Earth's vineyard. And now the belles who have with great persistency flourished in the germans and appeared night after night in decollete costumes, dividing up dances with different partners and sip ping champagne and sniffing bouquets worth their weight in gold between the desolutary lapses of the conversation, will don their meekest and most uncatentations at fre, take out their gilt-edged prayer books and put in an appearance regularly at every evening service, taking their full part in the litanies, and acknowledging their full demerits of things they ought not to have done and of leaving undone those things which they should have cone. Not that all the devotces of society in Washington are reconscientions about the keeping of re-fashion.
