WOODEN DOGS are quoted quiet, because of their nap. The first negro criminal was the original "Black Crook."

The most humorous member of a dog is the wag of his tail. The foot notes of any good medical work ought to contain cures for corns.

Eggs will soon be cheaper, for there is a divinity which shapes our hens. A pert miss says she wears bands because she doesn't want to look so forebore.

A clergyman said a clever thing the other day to amuse his congregation, namely, that there was still many a one who whilst engaged in singing apparently with one hand in his pocket, in scripping the edge of a three-cent piece to make sure it was not a dime.

"A BLESSING IN DISGUISE." 484 ADELPHI ST., BROOKLYN, N. Y., Nov. 29, 1881. No family should be without ALLEN'S Points P. L. Allen's their healing powers are wonderful and their efficacy for rasching and lasting. For years past I have seen and known them to cure and relieve the most obstinate and distressing cases of rheumatism, kidney complaint, bronchitis, neuralgia, lumbago, inflammation of the lungs and throat, paralysis, asthma, spinal weakness, and colds and colds. In my own case they have afforded me almost instant and permanent relief. My friends consider them as invaluable and speedy remedy for all kinds of aches and pains. They are a blessing in disguise; and no wife or mother should be without them if she values her peace and comfort and freedom from nervous exhaustion and other ailments. As a strengthening plaster, also for backaches and weaknesses, they have no equal. I have never yet found a plaster so efficacious and stimulating, or to give so much general satisfaction. Used in connection with Dr. Cassen's Universal Life-giving and Healing Pills, no one need despair of a speedy restoration to good health.

MRS. E. TOMPKINS. ONE TRIAL. If you have been using other Plasters one trial of ALLEN'S Points will convince you of their wonderful superiority. Take no other so called porous plasters that claim to be better, they are all frauds gotten up to sell on the world-wide reputation of the genuine article.

My dear Tom, I speak to you not only as an old friend, but as a medical man; and I see that it is quite necessary for you to have complete and perfect rest for some weeks. You have been overdoing it in nursing that old uncle in the country for the past three months, and to my own knowledge, have taken the last train down there at night and the first train to town in the morning, and have consequently not had a good night's rest for all that time. How can you stand it, without suffering from it? Don't you feel to require rest?

"Not the least in the world," returned Raven. "Oldly enough, the nursing seems to have done me good. I confess to having felt thoroughly knocked up some weeks since; but I battled bravely against the feeling, won the victory, and now I'm as fresh as paint and up to work better than ever."

"You don't look it. I repeat, you look thoroughly worn out. But you know your own business and state of health; and now your uncle is gone and has left you a potful of money, you can take things more easy."

"Yes, old boy, I'm game for anything—mind and body first-class; and I intend to stick to my hospital work. It's very good of you, Jack, to take an interest in my health and all that, but say no more about it, I beg."

Raven and I were at the same hospital—St. Luzurs—where he held a medical and a surgical appointment. We were both hard worked, often day and night; and my time and attention, for about three months after the above conversation, were so fully occupied that I forgot to think of a more of the occurrences. Raven looked in good health, and was very successful—indeed he had fair to rise in a short time to great eminence in the profession. He was immensely popular with everyone. His gray hair and bright blue eyes, and healthy, florid, complexion, combined with a frank, open and hearty manner in speaking, made him a friend with everybody, and inspired confidence in all his patients as well as in all his friends.

As nearly as I can recollect, it must have been about three months after his uncle died that Raven came up to me one day in the hospital. "I've just received a summons to Exeter," said he. "The family is wealthy and influential; and, from what I know of the case I've been called there to attend. I'm sure its more of a surgical than a medical one. It will be an excellent chance for you, Lawson; and I can promise you a good fee to begin with. Therefore, if you can possibly manage it, meet me at Paddington this evening at half-past nine, and we will go down together by the express. Send me word during the afternoon whether you can come or not."

I hesitated. It was the depth of winter, and I hardly liked leaving my wife and a most important baby; but my wife's presence—this was a golden opportunity not to be rashly neglected. I decided to risk my wife's disappointment. "It is most kind of you, Tom. I will certainly go down with you. So far as I can see, there will be nothing to prevent my doing so."

A glim of satisfaction shone in his bright blue eyes. "You promise?" "Unless anything unforeseen should happen to prevent me, I will be down at the station at half-past nine."

"Remember!" Raven was dramatically impressive. I thought, as he parted; and I arranged my work so as to be able to keep my appointment. The hardest task was breaking the news to Amy, who would be long-spirited and complain up all kind of horrors and impending railway accidents, and who finally dissolved in a shower of tears as I tore myself away, burdened with an end of fringe and combs to alleviate in some measure the moral wet blanket she had thrown over me.

I was only just in time to catch Raven, who had just opened the door of the railway carriage. "Jump in, Jack, jump in! Half-a-crown to the guard has secured this compartment for us all the way down; so we shall have it to ourselves without fear of interruption. Time's up; you have five minutes. Fire away!"

He sang in my log and the several rugs, &c., and we entered. The guard touched his hat and shut the door with a bang. "This door is unlocked, guard?" questioned I. "Yes, sir; the nearest platform is always unlocked. The other door is locked."

"He whistled, and the train started. "I can't bear the idea of both doors being locked," I remarked to Raven. "In case of accident it would be impossible to escape from the carriage."

"It doesn't matter," he said, and then related to me. For about twenty minutes he remained opposite to me, sometimes with his eyes closed, sometimes with them fixed upon me in a most unpleasant manner. All my endeavors to draw him into conversation failed, and after a time I gave them up and also relaxed into silence.

Suddenly he rose from his seat and drew from the inside of his
