LEHIGHTON, PA.

SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1883.

SOME time ago Gen. Ignatieff amused himself by assuring an English visitor that Russia would gladly barter her Jews for Irish, Russia giving ten Jews in exchange for one Irishman. This Ministerial joke has been received in another shape by a St. Petersburg print, which advocates the establishment of Fenian settlements in eastern and southeastern Russia, and urges the Government of the Czar to take up the cause of Irish nationality.

BARNEY GILMORE says that Thomas Jefferson was the progenitor of dynamitism, because he "planted the seeds of discord in civilized society when he promulgated the doctrine that 'all men are created equal, and endowed by the Creator with certain inalienable rights, among them life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.'" The Bishop regards this doctrine as false in its notions of human equality, and as the cause of communism, nihilism, and general restlessness.

THE tornadoes with which portions of the Mississippi basin are tormented are frequent, but their seeming number is added to by every violent wind gust that topples down improperly built chimneys and "balloon-frame" houses. The frequent destruction of such cheap structures in the West is no proof, according to the Chicago Times, that that part of the country is peculiarly subject to dangerous winds; it only shows that it is subject to a sham mode of house building.

ARCHBISHOP WOOD on Saturday replied to the requests made by a committee of the Catholic members of the Grand Army of the Republic asking for the following privileges: "That a requiem mass may be celebrated on Decoration Day, May 30, for the repose of the souls of our deceased comrades, and the Grand Army of the Republic be permitted to attend such service in the dress and uniform of their organization, and that the Posts be allowed to attend the funeral services of their deceased members in Catholic churches and cemeteries." The following is a copy of the letter received by Edmund English, Chairman of the committee. "In response to your very respectful memorial of May 10, submitted to him, the Archbishop directs me to say that he regrets very much being unable to grant the several petitions therein contained. He has uniformly declined to accede to like requests made in the past, and is furnished with no reason for receding from the position he has taken in reference to the organization mentioned. He is desirous that you should know that his action is not based on mere conjecture, but is the result of careful and thorough investigation. Therefore, you will understand this answer is final, not only in your regard, but, too, in regard to every other secret society."

Our New York Letter.

Regular correspondence of ADVOCATE.

NEW YORK, May 22d, 1883

There is every indication that Thursday the 24th instant, the day on which the Brooklyn Bridge is to be opened, will be almost a public holiday in this city. For Brooklyn the occasion will be a gala day. There is scarcely a house which is not making preparations for decoration, and the fireworks in the evening will form the most brilliant pyrotechnic display ever witnessed in this city. The janitors of the office buildings in the vicinity of the anchorage will make a good thing of it on that day, as they will be in a position to let out places on the roofs for sight seers. One of them told me the other morning that he had already taken in money enough to equal two months wages from persons who had engaged places on his roof to witness the ceremonies.

The raids against the opium dens have ended on account of the unwillingness of the police to aid the Young Men's Catholic Association in their good work. What Chinamen have been arrested were discharged on their own subsequent trials because the police had failed to secure proper legal evidence. The society however has produced one good effect. It has called public attention to this sickening phase of metropolitan life, and the dangers to which young girls of the poorer class are subject. Furthermore, despite the efforts of the police to throw cold water on their labors they mean to keep a watchful eye, and any overt act will be promptly brought to the attention of the courts. Tom Lee, the ex-deputy Sheriff and whilom "boss" of the Chinese colony, has become tired of the struggle waged against him and left the district. As the Chinese colony is now practically without a head it will be more easy to impress upon it the necessity of obeying the laws of the country to which they have come.

Last Saturday I attended the Spring races of the Meadow Brook Haut at Long Island. I have seen a great deal of riding, but must confess that some of the gilded youth whom everybody outside of the charmed circle makes it a point to laugh at, show a skill in the art of horsemanship and a pluck in riding at obstacles which is commendable. Riding across country is calculated to develop what courage a man has, and the scrawny men have a great deal of it. One of them got a terrible fall. In taking a wall a stirrup leather broke, and he came an awful cropper, the horse going down with him. He was pretty badly bruised and must have been considerably shaken up. Yet as he had an engagement to ride in the following race he was promptly in the saddle, and although his right arm was useless, he made a magnificent finish with his left. Horsemanship in this section is on the increase, both quantitatively and qualitatively, and as a result we see fewer pale cheeks and sunken eyes in the business world than in former years.

Jay Gould's son George and Freddy were competitors for Mrs. Langtry's favor when she first came to this country. George Gould—"Pimples," as his intimates call him, did not have much chance and was beaten almost from the start. Mr. Sanford however made the pace hot, but finally Freddy "came away and won in a gallop," as they say on the turf. Mr. Sanford it is said did not feel overpleased at this and a coolness sprang up between the two, and the beaten candidate sought an opportunity to revenge himself. Now Freddy very frequently drinks a little more than his constitution allows, and then he is very easily nettled. Coming out of D'Imonico's last Saturday he met Sanford and a friend. He asked them where they were going and Sanford intimated that he might call on Mrs. Langtry. Freddy in his cups is always disagreeable in language, and he replied to Mr. Sanford's remark with the choice expression "You're a liar." Thereat Sanford knocked him down. Fashionable society now anxiously awaits developments and it is just possible that there will be a hostile meeting somewhere.

Reclaiming the fallen is a good work, but religious exercises the way they are now being conducted by certain sensationalists are bad. There is Jerry McAuley for instance. He is going on at such a pace that I am surprised that the really earnest Christians who support him allow their names to be used by him. Not satisfied with making a mockery of religion by conducting revival services in the Cremorne Garden, he has now twice held services in McGlory's notorious den. McGlory is perfectly satisfied for it is business for him as it advertises his place, but what do you think of the manner in which services must be conducted there when McGlory asks permission of the Police Board to sell cider to the congregation during the exercises. Of course he was refused, but the effrontery of the request is absolutely revolting.

When Jay Gould sold the World, it was currently expected that Cyrus W. Field, who bears the same relation to him as "Me Too" Platt to Roscoe Conkling, would follow suit with the Mail and Express. This expectation is likely soon to be verified. Mr. Melville D. Stone, of the Chicago News has been negotiating with him for some days, and as I am informed the bargain is likely to be closed early this week, unless difference of opinion should arise about minor details. Mr. Field has been unable to make the Mail and Express pay. It is well edited and its news pages and departments are ably conducted and well written. Yet the name of Field it seems has always acted like a damper on the financial success of the venture. Should Mr. Stone buy it, I think he will make a success of the paper, for it is beyond doubt the most valuable afternoon newspaper property in the city. I believe Mr. Field asks $740 000.

The Billiard match which has now been running for a week is exciting very little interest. The play is certainly poor and this disgusts people. But how could it be otherwise when most of the leading players keep carousing all night. Nerves cannot be steady under such circumstances.

Our Washington Letter.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 19, 1883.

The visitor to Washington at this season of the year sees this beautiful city at its best, and those who intend to visit it, and do not care for the attractions of Congress and the crowds it draws with it cannot come at a better time. The trees are all in full leaf, and have been for ten days, cold as the spring has been. The skies are, for the most part, bright and glowing, and the air is genially warm, with just a flavor of coolness to remind one that the summer heat has not come yet to render it parched and lifeless. The visitors at this time realize that the glory of Washington is in its trees. Every street and avenue is lined with them; they shade the parks and little triangles and squares of green which the peculiar conformation of the city places at almost every street corner. Seen just at this time, when the new foliage is fresh and brilliant, the whole city seems set in a frame of living green. Washington, with more than a hundred miles of trees in its streets—not including those in the parks—surely sets a good example to other American cities, so many of which have allowed their trees to die out and be crowded, until their streets look like tunnels in Brownstone quarries or brick-yards.

The departments might as well have been closed up this week for all the business that has been done. Most of the male employes were soldiers in the late war, and they have been excused to attend the exercises of the army re-union. Half the Cabinet is out of town, and those members who have not been attending the re-union exercises have been seen at the races.

The number of veterans upon the streets and about the hotels on Thursday was considerably smaller than the day before. Some went home on Thursday morning and the best part of the remainder went down the river and to the Schuetzen Park. Livery-stable-keepers did a rushing business hiring teams to those who desired to revisit the old forts and camp-grounds around Washington. Others "did" the city and went through the several Departments. The old flag-room of the War Department, in which are exhibited thousands of Confederate battle flags, was a point of interest to those who had a hand in the capture of many of them.

The indications are that ex Supervisor A. P. Fatten, of Philadelphia, will be the successor of Commissioner of Internal Revenue Raum, and especially since he is strongly urged for the position by Senator Don Cameron. The latter, it was thought, was supporting Deputy Commissioner Rogers, but it has transpired that he is for Mr. Fatton, and it is very probable that his candidate will be Commissioner after to-morrow's Cabinet meeting.

Steps are being taken to secure increased mail facilities for Yellowstone National Park, and the Post Office Department officials have the matter now under advisement. It is calculated that 50,000 tourists will visit the park this summer. The visitors will come from all parts of the world. A gentleman who has just returned to this country said today that fifteen other gentlemen came across with him from Europe for the express purpose of going to the National Park. The mammoth hotel which is about completed will accommodate 400 guests.

General Ferry is to deliver the annual address to the graduating exercises and re-union of former graduates. General Thayer's statue is to be unveiled on June 13, the day before the meeting of the association of graduates.

The President will leave here on the 23d inst. for New York, to be present at the opening of the Brooklyn Bridge the day following. AUGUR.

[FROM OUR REGULAR CORRESPONDENT.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 21, 1883.

The civil service commission has at last got its rules, its chief examiner, and its rooms in the new Museum, and it is expected to soon begin reforming things. As the new rules do not contain provisions for competitive examination for promotions the clerks now in office do not regard them with more than passing interest. But speaking of the clerks recalls the scene about Washington last Wednesday morning. The Capital has welcomed within its gates many distinguished men of the world seeking honor, pleasure, or self, but it never extended a more generous reception to any than was accorded the renowned Phineas T. with his "Greatest Show," etc. No man ever received here such a contribution of filthy lucre in one day. When the parade came up the broad streets, "the animals, two by two, the hippopotamus and the kangaroo," the entire "classified departmental service" forgot the civil service rules, leaving their desks in haste for a more congenial spot near the curbstone. Here could be seen the messenger rudely jostling the chief of his division in his eagerness to catch a glimpse of Jumbo's dirty playmates. Here was the confidential clerk of a Secretary roughly pushing aside the "bootblack" who had dared to come between him and the octoroon beauty on the painted wagon. Clerks, male and female, of all sizes and colors, from first to fourth class, for once stood upon the same footing. A correspondent strolled into the Treasury department during the passing of the pageant, but the desolate appearance of the place and the dismal sound of his footfalls reverberating through the corridors made him think of the illustrious dead in Westminster Abbey. He withdrew, remarking with pathos—"empty is the Treasury—clerky's gone."

I hear rumors of an enterprise that in breadth and bigness is the largest thing in this decade. It is a plan to get out of the grip of the United States thirteen millions of dollars, with the accumulated interest for nearly twenty years. When the Hon. William E. Chandler was Assistant Secretary of the Treasury he organized the Cotton bureau. In it was deposited the money received for cotton taken from private individuals and sold by Government agents. This money belongs to many persons and a few corporations in the south. It was the intention of Mr. Chase to hold this money in trust for the person to whom the cotton belonged, but for some years nobody has been able to obtain a dollar. The largest amount ever recovered from the Government by any individual was $600 000, which the estate of Charles Lamar, of Georgia, got by employing General B. F. Butler and ex-Attorney General Williams. Bontwell could not resist the persuasive powers of these two eminent men, and so he gave up the amount mentioned. The fee was $50 000 to each a torney. The new combination with its guns aimed at this fund has, I hear, brains, courage, and money is behind it. So perhaps it may win. It will play for a big stake.

Of course the Fair divorce case excites interest and comment in Washington, though we do not assume here to know anything about the real merits of it. There is considerable speculation as to the Senator's wealth, since it is reported that his wife has been allowed four millions and a half. There seems to be something in the atmosphere of the "free, unfettered west" that plays the deuce and all of it with the bond matrimonial, and induces an alarming laxity in the observances of the seventh commandment. Especially has this been noticeable in the last three or four years, and among what are known as "bonanza statesmen." When the Hon. William Sharon came here as a Senator there were many stories told, which could not well be put into print. But Sharon while here comported himself about as well as the average statesman. The country has not yet recovered from the spectacle flamboyant Tabor furnished it, when, behold, his brother statesman, Fair, occupies its attention. Well, it is the old, old story, as old as the history of man. Even Solomon, with all his wisdom and experiences—having three hundred wives—did not escape, and why should Fair? This has been a bad year for the righteous—for how many good men have gone wrong—and no wonder a wicked man, with the bank account this Fair possesses, should get out of the straight and narrow path. I well remember when society was agog over a wonderful entertainment the Nevada Senator gave a year or two ago, that a congenial man of the world said the Wormley dinner was very fine, but not a circumstance to one the honorable Senator had given to some ladies of the half-world a week or two before in New York, when Fair turned himself loose, as it were, and astonished that portion of the population he was entertaining at once with his wealth and his wit! But the little episode now creating a languid interest in Nevada will not matter. The honorable Senator will come back next winter, give elegant dinners, and doubtless find elegant people of both genders to eat them. Society will condone his slight falling away, and all will go well, for money covers a multitude of sins in Vanity Fair.
