So sure was I that I had got upon the trail of the ohild abduetor that I felt annoyed at every lit- tle delay along the route. My mind was in a glow of excitement. The game was big but shy and cunning. Nothing less than the bird in the hand would make me feel any certainty of success. I must reach Liverpool b fore the City of Rien- mond took her departure. If not, the pursuit would be longer and might end in failure even. When half the journey had been made and the train was whiri- ing through the darkness at a tremendous speed, there was a sudden stoppage that forboded no good. We came to a dead stop. One of the drivers of the englue had broken down. The situation was interesting and exa-perating to me. Some of the presengers slept on oblivi- ous to their surroundings. Not so with me. I frotted and chafed with disap- pointment. The hours wore on. When at length the injury had been repaired and the train started on its course, I had the sat- isfaction of knowing that I could not reach Liverpool before the steamer sailed. I resolved to take the chances, and so I curled myself up within myself and my own thoughts. Just as I had feared, the steamer had sailed upon my arrival in Liverpool. My next thought was to cable to New York, giving a description of the woman and child and have the former arrested. This would bring others into the case. I wanted the honor and reward myself.	ion, male or female, where was that mys- terious personage? I must not be folled at this stage of the game. Once on land and swallowed up in the mielstrom of the masses, the childstealer and the child might soon lose their identity. I must act qrickly. Confronting the fair woman, I said in a stern voice: "Your name is not Ben- son. You are Miss Jane Perey, the th- ductor of the nephese of Sir Edward Pordage of Beenham, England, I am a detective. You are my prisoner. The woman stood transfired, her form treubled, her cheeks blanched at this sudden encounter. Although capable of calm self-possession, she was thrown iff her gased. Woman-like, her emotions overcome her and she fell at my fest. "Where is the child?" i She besitated and falteringly moaned: "In the sternge." She conducted me there, when my eyes fell upon the heir of Beenham Lodge crowing in the arms of a fat Irish urrss. I saw that my beautiful prisoner was comfortably provided for rill the sailing of the next steamer, and had the pleasure of placing the young heir in the arms of old Sir Edward. The spinster siter, stung at the action of Ler brother in making the two of the Burtons instead of the Applebees the successors of Lis large estates, had concould this plot to sudnet the chilt.
