General Manuel Gonzales, President of Mexico.

THE UNSETTLED condition of Mexican politics, just now, a revolution being threatened on account chiefly of the exactions made by the Government, makes a sketch of the President, to whom his enemies ascribe the difficulty, opportune.

Mexico is short of money for the use of the Government, and is reported to be anxious to borrow $20,000,000 at the present time.

Two years ago, under similar pressure, Congress passed a law granting the President extraordinary powers. In pursuance of this law, President Gonzalez recently issued a stamp decree, thereby creating the present condition, which is more disastrous to business than the previous financial stringency.

General Gonzales has been President of Mexico since December 1, 1880. He was born fifty years ago, at Matamoros, State of Tamaulipas, Mexico.

Prefering a military life, he joined the army as a private soldier, and rose rapidly in his profession. He served with distinction against the French in 1864, as Colonel of a regiment, and lost an arm while defending the fortress of San Marco against the invaders. In 1876 he was created a Major-General, and held office as Secretary of War during the administration of President Diaz, whom he succeeded as the result of a revolution.

Under President Gonzalez's administration Mexico has made rapid advances in material prosperity and civilization. He has a fine presence, is not tall in stature, but will build and of sturdy physique. Estimates of his character vary greatly.

HOW SHE WILTED HIM.

"How did you succeed with that fellow on Eighteenth street who were dead gone?" asked one old bachelor preservative of another old ditto, yesterday.

"Didn't succeed at all," was growled in reply.

"Why, what was the matter? Thought you had a dead sure thing on the charming little widow?"

"No did I, but I didn't try a large majority. She knocked me out on the first round, Marquis of Good-bye rules."

"Why, how's that?"
