Five years were lost in the vortex of time, and again Noel Vaue comes before us, but greatly changed from the boy of 20, for his extraordinary talents and untiring energy have won for him a position as one of the most preminent young lawyers at the Philadelphia bar.

Living at Bedfordville was a Mr. Carter, a gentleman of wealth and position, who had been endeavoring for a number of years to establish the claim of two children placed under his care at the death of their guardian to an immense property that had been left without a will. Having met with Noel when in Philadelphia, and known him as a boy when in Benfordville, he determined to place the case in his bands. The day when the important case was to be decided arrived, and as Nool, after hearing his opponent's arguments upon the sulject. arose to reply, he took a careful glance around the court-room. Judge Allyn sat upon the bench, and as Nocl saw the proud look he were, his face brightened and a litter smile of sarcasm bovered around his mouth, while a triumphant light come into his eyes. As he glanced ground the room his eyes met the full, loving gaza of Belle Aliya
