How to Save Corn Fedder.

"The complaint that stock will not en corn todder well, or over one fourth to one third of it, arises from our method, or lack of method, in securing it. Most of our corn is allowed to stand as it grew, and to have its nutrition washed out of it, and then i is fed where it grew to cattle roving through the field. The bleached stuff is little liked and fittle esten. A few cut it and put i into large shocks, but not until after the corn is dead ripe. It should be cut while the stalks are yet quite green, the corbeing in the latter stages of the dough state or before the kernel is to hard to crush easily in the fingers and before it is dry throughout. It should be put into shocke made fron four hills square in the place of the old 16 nills square, and bound round the top hy rye straw, twine, or a green corstalk. It is well to bend the tassels down binding their tops under, thus turning th rain. In the course of two to four weeks, depending upon the weather, the small shocks may easily he busked out and the corn cribned. The band will not have to he removed por the shock taken down in busking. After husking, the hills of corn around which the shock is made, as fast as the shock is wanted, may be cut, and the fodder of the shock may be quickly and easily, by one man, passed to the wagon for Very Moderate Prices and Perfect Fits is the stacking, the band around the shock always remaining on. Thus treated it will be tend er, more palatable, and more nutritious, and, when fed with clover, cotton seed meal, or middlings, will be nearly all est en. It will also be handled from the star at less expense than by the system of 16 hills square shocks.

VALUE OF THE CORN. "Shocked while the corn is thus green most of our farmers suppose that less and poorer corn is obtained. This is a mistake as not an ounce in weight of untritive value is lost. I have devoted three years of experimental work to this question with Northern flint corn, grown north. One test was elaborate and covered hundreds of weighings, beginning with the green corn from measured sections and possing along until dry, the following season, and then weighed out to cown whose milk, twice daily was weighed for corn thus shocked, and also for corn ripened on the hill. Each kind was weighed out to pigs also. In every case for tures years, I have received more corn when shocked at the glazing of flat ectly opposite the United States Patent than when allowed to fully ripen on the Mice, we are able to attend to all patent hill. One year the relation stood as 1684 corn. When fully ripe 100 hills gave 1214 the of corn, which agrees with fulle experiences with the Flint corn elsewhere
