FARMERS' COLUMN,

Fanny Field who conducts the Poultry Department of the Prairie Farmer, is not imited in her knowledge of household and far a matters, to Plymouth Rocks, Light Brahmas, poultry yard and houses, and the general management of poultry. In a late Obio Farmer she talks, in her racy way about churns and butter making.

With a meckness becoming in a we who don't know the meaning of half the words used by scientific makers of gilt edge butter, I step into the dairy department in search of information; and I don't want mybody to make fun of my ignorance. It a churn that I want now. I have been told that the old fashioned dash churn is a "relic of barbarism," the dark agenor something, and that no "decent, granulated (is that the proper word?) butter ever came out of a dash churn;" but still (with sorrow I confess it!) I keep right on using it be cause up to date I have failed to find a churn that suits me as well. It may be that I am hard to suit, or that I have a prejudice against new-frangled things, or that I don't know good butter from greese; but in my humble opinion it is because there is not a practicle of imagination in my composition where butter making it concerned, and that I strongly object to washing one of the patent churns when my little, old, stone, dash churn makes just as good butter, and is easier to bandle and

In your last number my mind was somewhat relieved to learn that a "person of udgment" can make "prime, gilt-edged butter'in "any good, sound, clean churn." Then a prime article of butter can be madin a dash churn? I half suspected that; but im't there a churn of some kind that will do the same thing with less labor? I want a churn with no more muchinery about it than a dash churn, one wherein we can churn anywhere from four to eight quarts of cream, and above all, one that a woman of average strength can use every other day without the penalty of lam shoulders. I don't want a "two minute" churn but I do want one that will not re quire a man's strength to "run," and that will "bring" the butter in from fifteen to twenty minutes steady work, provided, e course, that the cream is "just right" when put in the churn. If anybody known anything, from actual experience, about such a chura,I imagine that a good many readers, women who churn the cream from one,two three cows, would be yery glad to hear all about it; and, mind you, we don't want t pay an extravagant price for a churn. Thi paying enough for cows, feed, and dairy "fixins" to buy all the butter a small family Very Moderate Prices and Perfect Fits is the ly would need for a century or so, don't strike me as good economy for common motto of this Establishment. YOU are in people to practice.

We, the hired girl and I, made son regular gilt edged butter once, but we didn't nake it in a dash churn, nor yet in any ne of the 4,800 churps which have been patented. Listen: Once upon a time the head of the family gave notice that three gentlemen-two of them tolerably well-known as agricultural writers, and the thrid as a maker of an extra fi no article of utter-would dine with us the following lay. I didn't care for the other chaps, bu that butter man - what should I do? We SWOYN Subscription List 70,000. had but one cow and she only gave about r quarts of milk a day; consequently we didu't make much butter-in fact on weekly churnings wouldn't reach round and we were obliged to plees out wir store butter." The last churning had al disappeared; could I set store butter before man who made butter that sold to priv ate customers for double the highest mark Canada and Europe, at reduced rates. With air principal office located in Washington, dispatched to the neighboring village with recity opposite the United States Patent | instructions to get some of the best cream bilice, we are able to attend to all patent ery butter that could be procured. "No usiness with greater promptness and de-patch and at ters cost than other patent at the report. But we had some butter or the table the next day-a beautiful, yellolump duly stamped with a suggestive clove leaf, and the gouts went into exclamatio points over the "delicious flavor" of that outter. The hired girl, who waited e table, and who had "read up" on butter making until she had the whole theory at her tongue's end, gaye me a comical took and retreated to the kitchen, from whence there presently came a subdued sound as it comebody were trying to suppress a laugh with the corner of a gingham apron. But I maintained my gravity and dignity while I listened to a prize essay on butter makmaking, wherein was landed the grea aperiority of the new methods over the Central Carriage Works old. At last I was asked to tell just how that" flinely flavored" but was made "Such butter never came out of the old dash churn," remarked one of the guests as he put a very small piece of the "nectar on a very small piece of bread. "No, it did not," I replied; "this butter was stirred early this morning with a wooden ladle is a tin pail, the buttlermilk washed out with cold water, salted by guess, set in the cellar for three hours, then worked lightly, stamp ed and put on ice till dinner time." Now I didn't tell this because I think that the proper way to make gilt-edged butter, but because-well, if you can't find the 'moral" without my help the sermon will be lost.
