His lecture embraced the justly celebrated $10 suitings period between the close of the Revolutionary War and the adoption of the Constitution; a period which is community passed by with only a few sentences in common school histories. The plainness and the simplicity of his speech, as well as his ex-haustive treatment of his subject, are commendable features of this lecture. After the lecture and an exercise given by two pupils of the Lehighton schools, the audience dispersed.

On Saturday morning at the appointed hour the High School room was filled to its utmost seating capacity with teachers and others interested in the progress of educacation. The Superintendent, perceiving that this room did not afford accommoda tion for the constantly increasing audience gave notice that the Institute would adjourn to the Hull.
