gest St. Cloud; pavements that lull you even in a herdic cab, these, in a great part, constitute my Washington. And if you ask where the diversion is, I can only answer that we find it in hansoms. There is something in Washington sug-gestive of every foreign city I have been in. In the parks, with the French nurses and the babies sitting about in the spray of the fountains, you may play fancy yourself in Paris; you may play that you are in London in a hansom, and certainly there is not a street cry in London more fascinating than than that of the "devilled-crabman," or the black buttercup girl: the flower-flagrant air is like to that of Morocco, and the street sights of Naples are not more interest-ing than these where the babies play in groups under the trees, and the negroes cluster in idle chatter, or sing quaint melodies at their work. To revive your memory of Holland, there is the lazy canal on which pleasure parties go to Great Falls or to Cabin John's Bridge, to keep the patriotic spark alive, ever if the Washington Monument and the Capitol were not always in view. The monumental thief, and the respectable old fogles who pocket the loss, have only to curse their own folly that they did not count their cash more frequently.

The mystery of the drug clerk's murder is still as cloudy as ever. There appears to be an unwillingness on the part of everybody connected with him to say anything about his former history. As far as at present known, the man was entirely correct in his habits, trusted implicitly by his employer, who had known him for many years, a kind hus-band, an affectionate father and a good citizen. The only reasonable theory is that the man was murdered by a robber, and the cutting of his throat was an af-of the balance sheet they have nearly a million in reserve. For a wonder, no poor man suffers by the larceny of this ter act to give the appearance of suicide. A few days' work by the reporters may drag the mystery to light.

The air reverberates with the sound of wedding bells. More marriages have taken place within the last thirty days than in the previous six months. The fored decorations have been the past floral decorations have been the most costly and lavish that we have seen for many years. Fifty thousand dollars would hardly pay for the flowers that have been used in New York and Brook-ley in the year week.

The great, severe shaft grows upon one, and, after all, it is fitting and worthy the memory of the man.
