Multiplication of Breeds of Poultry. With our domestic animals, as with ine and cheese, the value of a breed epends in some measure upon its age, If breeders realized this, there would be promising lot, as we remember them, but they had elements of great value. White seemed to predominate, and the single-combed white fowls, were separated from the others and carefully bred. It was several years before a fixed breed was established, even with this excellent foundation. The foundation was good, because all the birds had the same general characteristics, which were peculiar and valuable, such as were possessed by none of the then existing favorite breeds. Sq when the Leghorns were introduced, with the uniform favorite breeds. Sq when the Leghorns were introduced, with the uniform points of a fancier's fowl, they became at once great favorites and had deserved success. Then this excellent and unique breed, was made to carry forward with it, towards popularity, a number of allied breeds, all decidedly inferior to it -Browns, Blacks, Dominiques, etc.and now it seems the breed, which properly affiliates with the Spanish, is to be Hamburgised and given a rose comb ally appeared in the original stock; but they were regarded as abnormal.
