FARMERS' COLUMN.

The Treatment of Sod in the Fall.

In the ordinary rotation of the farm sod land is usually plowed for corn. Opinions differ in regard to the advantage, or otherwise, of the fall plowing of sod. The truth of the matter is, that like all other farm work, this depends very much upon circumstances. One of these is, the manner in which the plowing is done. If the dry, bare sod is plowed under roughly, and so left until spring, when it is cross-plowed, and the sod cut up into pieces, and turned this way and that, and the greater part reversed, the work had certainly been better left undone. This way of treating sod, too common, we are sorry to say, is a most mischlevous one, and leaves the land in a wretched plight for corn planting. The better way is, to spread what manure is ready for the land, and leave it until November, and then turn the whole under with an even and regular lap furrow. If this is well done, it leaves the soil in the very best ondition for spring work. The furrow dices lie with the manure between them, while the manure is not buried under the sod, but both standing, ir part, on edge, allow the air to permeate through the crevices, and cause thorough lecomposition. The crests of the ridges break down by the action of frosts, and the land is gradually consolidated by settlement, through the winter. When the harrow is passed over the land in the spring, the fine manure, and the soil, and the decayed sod, are thoroughly mixed on the surface, leaving a mass of plant food below, as deep as the land had been plowed. The roots of the young corn plants find food wherever they penetrate the soil, and an abundauce of it within reach to carry them to the end of the growing season. In the culture of every crop, very much depends apon the preparation of the soil, but this is most especially true as regards corn, which occupies the ground for only about three months. How neces sary then it is, to provide a store of food for this crop, of the right kind, in the right place, and in sufficient quantity to supply its urgent necessities. One of the most effective ways of making this requisite provision, is to make the most of the sod by treating it at this season in the manner here described .- Am. Agriculturist.

The Jersey Hay Barrack One of the most convenient and secure shelters for hay or grain, outside of a good barn, is the "Barrack" used the Jersey Dutch. A barrack is picturesque, and convenient besides, and they show the thrifty, neat farmer, as well as any other farm building of appendage. The barracks of a good farmer are straight, well roofed, and tidy. The hay is well laid up, neatly raked down, and the tight roof or cover lies close upon it. The slack, shiftless farmer's barracks are one-sided, the posts often braced with rails on the outside, the cover sits on lop-sided, and probably leaky. These barracks are so little used outside of New Jersey, and the adjacent parts of New York and Pennsylvania, that new comers generally liscard them, and have them removed before they really know their convenience and utility. These barracks are constructed by setting four corner posts. of chestnut or white oak, which are twenty, or twenty-five feet long, straight partly squared to eight inches through either three feet in the ground, or upor one side and at the ends, where they are halved together. In doing this, it is well to pin the ends with two inch oak tree-nails, which should stand up three or four inches above the sills when in place. Then when the posts are set at the corners, the pins will enter holes bored in the center of each post, and hold them in position. They will last as long as the posts and sills. For a temporary purpose, the posts may be simply set in the ground twelve feet apart; but if permanency is desired, it is best to use sills, and in this case, they should be set level, upon a flat stone at ach corner, and be supported in the middle besides. The posts must, moreover, be braced to the sills, either by lingonal braces, or by straight rails, roughly squared, two by four, mortised into the posts at a height of four feet above the sills, or at a hight of six feet, in case the barrack may be intended to be boarded up to make a stable. When used as stables, they make very good shelters for young cattle or horses, the nside between the sills being filled up level with stones, and finished with a layer of cement concrete. The cover, or roof, efficacy, and may be made of boards, or thatch, the latter being by far the most picturesque, and being lighter, is easier to raise and lower .- Am. Agriculturint. Education in California Mrs. W. E. Chamberlain, wife of Pro-fessor W. E. LOUISVILLE, August 29, 1885. The second week of the Southern Exposition shows an increasing attendance, and each train from every direction brings more visitors. During the past week, including opening day, fully one hundred thousand people attended, and the aisles, halls, and grounds have presented a very lively appearance. It is said that never before have so many people from the country, or who do not live in Louisville, put in an appearance the first seven days. The fact that opening day saw everything ready is doubtless the cause of the unexpected large attendance.

Probably the foreign exhibits are examined closer and present more novel features to the average visitor than any other part of the Exposition, and crowds are gathered around the foreign departnents early and late. The ladies especially love to look upon handsome Indian shawls worth hundreds of dollars, also table spreads worked with pure gold and packing cases themselves are quite a curiosity, in which these rare goods, representing the finest manufacture of their country, are bought. The first exhibit you come to upon entering from 6th street, is a very creditable display, made by the Hawaian Islands. The combined government of the different islands show here samples of the various grades of sugar made, a production in which these islands are very prolific, also fine polished useful woods, cotton, straw and palm goods. Portraits of the different members of graphs of plantation, forest, river and coast scenes, well executed, give a good idea of the condition of civilization and improvements made in that country of which the American people have here tofore thought or cared but little. Their books, papers and other printed matter (which our correspondent could not un derstand), are convincing evidences o intelligence and a due regard for and appreciation of education.

The Chinese and Japanese have a very gorgeous display, principally of goods manufactured from paper, in which they excel all other nations, also many samples of tea. John was very anxious to secure a good location where he might show "Melican man" that Chinsee man's country is one well advanced in many of the so-called civilized arts. Doubtless the American can learn some thing from the Chinese and Japanes display, but we are of the opinion that the Chinaman will be benefitted most by the interchange of the ideas, and heathen are not slow to learn. They are very polite and attentive, and evidently want you to feel perfectly "at home" and take a "cup of tea." Russia occupies more space than any ds and customers that he other foreign country, and has on exhibition more and varied goods. The products of Russia are more of a solid, ts now receiving and opening up for ally the "Russian sheet," which is manufactured by and is a secret of that government; wooden ware, and the Central Carriage Works ombination of iron, wood and other materials in different articles, are shown Sleighs and buggies are prominent exhibits, and the peculiar pattern after which they are constructed attract con Hats, Caps, siderable attention. Pianos and other musical instruments shown, place that country farther in advance in manufac UMBRELLAS, &c., ture of stringed and wind instrument than it is usually credited with being. Rich chandeliers in valuable metals rare paintings, beautiful shells, furs and skins, books, china, and vases made from different material, are all shown in artistic display. Cases of wines, liquors and Champagne invite inspection as to Goods and learn prices before purage and quality. Altogether the Russian government has decided to show to the United States that she has many articles Repairing Promptly Attended to which dealers here may import with profit and to the advantage of their customers. The visitor to the Southern Exposition, by studying this exhibit, gains a very good idea of the country which is at present bothering England so much.

Austria and Hungary have brought some of their manufactured goods here and placed them on exhibition. The display is quite attractive and consists principally of light goods of more of an ornamental than useful nature. Jewelry, bric-a-brac, glassware, shell goods and precious stones fill up large cases, and courteous attendants in their peculiar and odd dress and manners endeavor to show you these goods, some of which can be bought. Much has been written and said about the Mexican exhibit at New Orleans, and the public are well aware that is a great attraction at any exposition. Mexico also sustains very close relations to the U. S., and the two countries, as the bands of railroad iron increases in number, grow each day of greater value to each other. That country almost seems a part of Uncle Sam's domain, and her rich silver and gold mines have and are doing much to enrich our country. The first foreign display which you come to after entering from 4th Avenue, the principal thoroughfare, is the Mexican, and a person could profitably spend a Canada and Europe, at reduced rates.
