afternoon. He didn't joke so audaciously with the boys nor break now and then into a little whistle.

"What's the racket, Mayrell?" Will started.

"O, nothing," he laughed and shrugged his shoulders.

"That's a lie," returned Andrews, with calm directness and the familiarity of born of friendship.

"You've helped me out of a good many tight places, I admit, but you can't do it this time."

Andrews, a sandy-haired and chubby-faced little Scotchman, cocked his head on one side like an inquisitive sparrow.

"It seems a foolish thing to worry so about," apologized. "Well, as you must know here's the case in a nutshell.

"Yes, I know," dryly. "I know women, and I guess they are all pretty much alike. I'm engaged."

"Fact. Got to get rich first. Domestic happiness indefinitely postponed.

"Don't joke, Dan. I'm a little sore on the subject of my poverty."

"I am not joking," replied Dan, snapping a spring with his finger.

"I should say so. How would stones like that do for earrings?"

"Right you are. But you can get the same if you wish."

Andrews restored the ring to the case and the case to his pocket.

"I'll try and manage it, Dot."

"Oh, you darling!" and the very next day he brought them up.

Didn't they sparkle on their bed of snowy velvet, though? And weren't they beautiful, actually larger than Mrs. Kingsley's too.

"I am glad you like them, Dora."

"Like them?"

And her eyes were brighter than the gems.

And for one whole month home was a paradise of serenity for Will Mayrell.

But she did not give her real name and address. He must not know!

"No, no," she explained, with a feverish laugh, "but I can't wait for them. Come, I do hate to be late."

And Will having read the oft-repeated advertisements and noticing the unadorned pink card, had come to his own conclusion.

Still the Exposition attracts, as evidence by its increased patronage every week.

The exhibits here are very similar to those at New Orleans, only there is not such a wilderness of buildings as at the latter place.

Every Saturday and Tuesday entrance fees have been reduced to 25 cents a head; while half-a-dollar is the price of admittance on other days.

Ab, even more than she thought!

"Two hundred and fifty! That is a great deal!" she murmured.

"We don't keep such stores, but we can have your missing earrings replaced at that sum."

But raise it again for a moment! It was two weeks since Mrs. Will Mayrell met her husband with a face which told him his scheme had found him out.

He comes in now and hands her a paper, pointing out a paragraph as he does so, and this is what she reads:

"New York.—[Special to the Tribune.]—George Kinsley, of Chicago, who arrived in the city yesterday, was to-day arrested for embezzlement, as he was about to board the steamship Servia.

His books show a deficit of $9,000, taken, as is credibly asserted, to gratify his wife's extravagant demands.

With a white face Dora laid down the paper. Will took her in his arms.

"Darling," he said, quietly, "that was the only other course left open to me."

"You forgive me now, dear?"

"Not that, Will. You forgive me. I didn't know—I didn't think—"

"Of course not, sweetheart. But we can do without diamonds better than without honor or each other, can't we?"

"Yes, yes," she cried, and clung to him. But the tears had washed away the old selfishness and envy, and with her smile of love began a grander, fairer womanhood.

"The American Art Association of New York is an organization, the object of which is to encourage and secure for the talent of this country just recognition.

They have collected paintings of many leading American artists, and from this selection about 450 of the best have been brought to Louisville.

To describe each painting and do it justice would require too much of your space, therefore I will only outline one or two of the most striking.

The "Sunset, Early Autumn" is a picture which shows us a glorious sunset sky, before which, on the right, is a thick hedge of trees, through which the bright light penetrates along the outer edge.

"An October Afternoon in the Catskills." The leaves have changed in color, and most of them have fallen, covering the ground almost as with a carpet.

"What difference does that make?"

"It makes all the difference in the world. Papa has got lots of money to buy presents with on the 3d of the month, but I don't stand no show at all on my birthday, for often his salary is almost always gone."

"What difference does that make?"

"One of our brilliant college youths was heard lately complaining in the presence of the family, about how difficult he found it to behave, when in society, with such much ease and gracefulness as he could wish.

"Why," he said at last, with a look of the utmost self-humiliation on his face, "if you'll believe me, I get so at times that I don't know what to do with my hands."

Then the youngest member of the family, who cared little for society and less for his elders, brought down the house by remarking, heartily, "Why don't you wash them?"

as well as managers one day to themselves out of seven.

One of the striking features of the Exposition is the newspaper exhibit for the benefit of the public and publisher alike, where the daily and weekly papers of the country are carefully filed every day.

A visit to an ordinary country fair is both instructive and recreative. Then why should it not be proportionately beneficial to witness such a display as given at the Exposition where muscle, brain and money have all combined to make it a success in every regard.

ROB BURDETTE'S ROMANCE OF JEFFERSON.
