FARMERS' COLUMN.

Attend to Fail Feeding. When the pastures begin to fall off, ome extra food should be provided for all the stock, but especially the cowr. Horses are always well cared for, but the cows are too often neglected, both as to food, and a supply of pure water. Those farmers who have provided somsoiling crops; will find the benefit of the fresh, green fodder; those who have not, will now see the disadvantage of being short of feed just at this season. It is very easy to secure this supply of food for the short season. Every farmer has a neglected piece of land, which is bringing in nothing, and which could te made to produce a very profitable crop of green feed. Such an opportunity ould not be neglected. Where the supply has been provided, a liberal feed bould be given daily. It is a mistake to suppose that It is a waste of food, to feed liberally now, and that it is better to save the food for winter, and spare it at this season. When any animal is kept short of food, it goes back rapidly, and more food will be required to make up this lost ground, than would have kept the animal in its normal condition. This is especially true as regards swine: If these are permitted to fall off now for lack of food, they will consume much more than the present gain, in recovering the loss. Animals that are intended for fattening, should be kept on full feed now, and those to be wintered over, should be kept in good condition. The old, and true adage, should not be forgotten, viz: "an animal that is well summered is half wintered." HENRY STEWART in Am. Agriculturis

Physicians were in Vain. Mr. David Netter, 795 Mission street, San Francisco, Cal., writes that for several months he suffered from a severe cold and cough, which finally resulted in total hoarseness. He consulted several physicians, but obtained no relief, and then tried Red Star Cough Cure. After taking a few doses he felt better, and before he had finished a bot-tle he was completely cured.

Stocking with Sheep for Winter. The season of autumnal drouths and short pasturage always brings lots of sheep upon the market, which their owners conclude not to winter, and that may often be very profitably bought. Sheep of good constitution, with good teeth, and healthy, may be safely bought, if one has feed for them which he wishes to convert into manure in the easiest and cheapest way. For instance, a large oat-grower has straw which will carry quite a flock through the season. If he buys ewes that have had lambs this year, and has them served early by a long-wool or Down ram; though thin now, they will rapidly pick up and probably give him one hundred, and twenty-five per cent of lambs. Of course, such ewes will need some grain; all the more, if wheat-straw instead of oat is their principal fodder. We have known lambs to bring in the spring double and triple what was paid for the ewes, while the ewes were worth fully as much as they cost, and the manure as much more. This is hardly the usual experience, but under advantage ous circumstances the experiment i well worth trying, recollecting that October service begins February lambs, which, if well pushed torward, may be in market by the first to the middle of May. Earlier service will, of course, bring earlier lambs and greater profit.-

Real Holstein Cattle-

The ancient duchy of Holstein, which was wrested from Denmark by Germany a few years ago, possesses extensive lowlands reclaimed from the sea. These were not ancient lake-beds, like much of the present area of Holland, but salt water marshes; hence are known to-day as the Holstein Marshes. The populaion is almost exclusively agricultural, and possess a valuable breed of neat tattle, which is bred both for beef and for milk. As milch-cows, they have schieved no special fame, but the beef s excellent. The strains of milch and seef cattle are kept quite distinct, as among Shorthorns. They are fairly well-formed, judging them by our notions, and are the basis of a very prostable trade. In color they are black and white, or dark-brown, or red and white, and show clearly that they have been modified by the shorthorn crues. otherwise are much like the Friesian and North Holland cattle, which pass by the trade name of "Holsteins" in this country. A notable difference between the Holstein beef and that of Normandy, which also finds its way to the great markets of the metropolis, is, that its fat is white, while that of the French beef is often golden yellow, like that of the Guernseys, and many of the Jersey cattle. The London market demands fat beef, and requires it to be "white as Alabaster," to meet the highest favor. - Am. Agriculturist.

BEMINTECENCE OF J. WILKES BOOTIL George C. Bates has turned his poetic and vivid imagination upon the actors he has known and this appears in the Denver Tribune: Poor Wilkes Booth was the most beautiful man whom I ever saw. Now that the memory of the sainted Lincoln can be recalled without tears of emotion, let us try to to do justice to the memory of a genius and to the truth of history.

It so happened that among the years from June, 1860, until 1871, my home was in Chicago, where I first met John Wilkes Booth, and became attached to him, because he was one of the most brilliant men, perfect gentlemen and accomplished artists that I have ever met. His personal beauty-his exquisite manners-his dress and address and all his habits of life were so unlike the commen set of young Americans that he was absolutely bewitching while his dramatic performances were unequalled by any one, save his splendid old father. had heard Forrest for years, had listened to Macreedy and Charles Kean. I had lived for weeks on the same ranch with James Murdoch in California; had idolized Charlotte Cushman for years; had written up the life and times of Mutilda Heron; had time and again listened to Fannie Kemble, and yet there was something in the professional ability, the magnetic delineations of young Booth, that has left an indelible impression on my mind and memory. To see him and Edwin play 'Othello' and 'lago,' alternating the characters in each act, was a feast of reason youchsafed few men. That Wilkes Booth was a young man of more dramatic talent and ability than Edwin, all who watched his early career must admit, been his father's successor none can deny. But that he was the sole inheritor of his father's genius and well-known ecentricities and insanity, his sad end and the public, and supply them with and fearful crime bear witness; and on this point it is desirable that the truth should now be known. During his last engagement in Chic ago, in 1863 and 1864, I learned that John Wilkes Booth was heart and soul in full sympathy with the Union cause and its triumph-and on more that one occasion he went with me to the Union meetings in the early part of the evening where I spoke—and invariably I went to the theatre where he played in the latter part of the evening, and sat entranced under his wonderful performnce. His rooms were at the old Tremont Hotel, and almost every evening. after the play I went home with him, supped with him and sat at his bedside all this time he was an active, zealous, sympathizer with all the efforts in the cause of the Union. But on leaving Chicago he went to Louisville, Ky. And then and there began the first steps in the life of Wilkes Booth which afterward ripened into a state of absolute insanity, under the influence of which,

and in a paroxysm of which, he finally killed Lincoln, and afterward was shot himself by captors almost as crazy as

HE HAD THE LAST SAY.

Sacramento Bec. Yesterday afternoon a number of lawers in the court house were discussing the influence of 'having the last say' on a jury, and whether or not the last speech was not the most effective, when a well-known member of the bar related the following:

When Alex Anderson and Charley

Jones were not so old as they are now-

When the time came for trial, Anderson was to defend one, Jones another, and B. G. Keller the third. After the testimony was concluded, the three young attorneys held a consultation as to who should speak first. Anderson and Keller seconed afraid that the three comler seemed afraid that the three combined arguments would be so lengthy that the elaborate efforts they proposed to make might be interrupted by the court, unless they could get in first, and they were very much astonished when Jones smilingly and magnanimously told them to proceed, and that he would take "the last say." Anderson spoke first, reviewed the testimony, and eleqently proclaimed the innocence of all obtained for Inventors in the United States dently proclaimed the innocence of all three prisoners.
