A. W. SHAW, widely known as "Josh Billings," died Wednesday in Monterey, California, of apoplexy.

THE beauties of litigation are well illustrated in what has been known as the "Jones County Calf Case" in a Western State. A farmer had four culves valued at $50 stolen from him. A neighbor bought them, innocently as he has always claimed, and was prosecuted for theft by an association of farmers. In return he brought suit against them for malicious prosecution, and so the litigation has gone on. He has finally recovered $7,000, and the total expenses safe, told his book-keeper that he would be absent, and that if he did not return by noon of the Ed to take the check and endorse it, procure the money upon it from the bank, and hand the meney to the foreman. On the 21st the bookkeeper altered the date of the check from the 22d to the 21st, procured the money, and absconded. Crawford sued the bank to recover his deposit. The case was argued in the Court of Appeals for the bank by John C. Shaw, and for Crawford by D. M. Forter. The Court of Crawford by D. M. Forter. The Court of the Court of FERDINAND WARD has made a long statement, filling ten columns of the New York Herald, pretending to give the full details of his great swindle. Much that he says will not be believed unless corroborated by other evidence, much is relatively unimportant. He shows that all the Grants received large "profits" according to the accounts, meaning that the public shall understand that they shared equally with him in the results of his swindling with him in the results of his swindling with him in the results of his swindling to give the adopted. Besides, the tendency toward extravagance such a plan would be likely to have, it is believed that it would tend still further to retard business. But the "profits," it appears on closer investigation, were reinvested in the "business" and were all finally lost together with the original capital. The same was true of several investors. But there are certain others to whom money and securities in large samounts were transferred by Ward after the failure, and who drew out large sums of money called "profits" aggregating millions in all. This part of the history of the firm still needs explanation. Why did Ward treat these investors so differently from the others, and where has the money gone?
