WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 21, '85. Mr. Eugene Higgins, the appointment clerk of the Treasury department, whose name has been mentioned in connection with the Honse doorkeepership has nev er thought much of the scheme. He has, within the past few days, been called upon by a number of Members of Congress, who have urged him to run for the position of Sergeant-at-Arms. He says that he would prefer that place to the doorkeepership and intends to see what, if anything, he can do towards

Among the strongest and noisiest advocates of this are the West ern members, who have for years favored the Hennepin Caual project. This scheme for taking great sums out of the Treasury has been killed every year through the inability of its advocates to procure a place for it upon any of the appropriation bills. Nearly every man who has had a job defeated in Congres is anxious to have the Appropriations Committee under Mr. Randall's econ omical management broken down. The House will be called upon to pass upon this changing of the rules at the very outset of the session, and it is expected that at least ten days will be given up to this discussion. The people who are advocating the change profess to be actuated by a desire to improve the reform; and both are divided on a high reform; and both are divided on a high tariff and silver coinage. This state of things, together with the independent attitude of the President—though as yet professing to stand quite within the Democratic party—makes the continued cohesion of each party, a matter which cannot be safely left to take care of itself. These questions, all save the silver coinage, are complex and at-stuse and difficult of solution in them-selves at best, perhaps; but especially difficult may we expect a Congress to difficult may we expect a Congress to find them, scarcely a member of which has trained himself for statesmanship; and for want of party unanimity on them they cannot be disposed of by a count of Senators and Representatives in each party composing the two bodies. But the questions are momentous and pressing. Not Implicated.

The report has been going the rounds of the press for some time that Seigfried in his statement of the Kester murder implicated the brothers of Christman as being participators in the tragedy. The following affidavit explains itself: Luzerne County ss.
