The Doctor Talks to the Boys. I have seen a great deal of evil come from the discontent of boys with their home life. As soon as they arrive at the age of sixteen or eighteen years, they think that the farm is too small for them, and that the city is the only proper place in which to live. I replied that I hadn't that pleasure. "Pleasure! Humph! It would afford me the most unbounded pleasure to get even with him for a little trick he played on me the other day over in Illinois.

I thought they eyed me rather more than was neces sary. However, I didn't say a word, but quietly seated myself opposite the dame, and commenced tactics.

"After I had looked at her once of wice she began to smile. 'Great Scott,' said I to myself, 'this is easier than I thought for.' So I smiled back. This was all the girl wanted. She began to move nearer to me. Then she nodded her head and smiled several times. In all my experience I never had a girl ac and I saw there was something wrong although for the life of me I couldn't imagine what it was. "This was all I wanted to know, and I started for the door, but it wasn't any use. The girl hung on, and got more and more excited every minute.

"In the mean time one or two of the boys had gone through the train, and when they came back they brought with them quite a number of interested spectators. The keeper advised me to hu mor ber, and I did. I humored all could. Every time I tried to get away she would get violent, and I didn't like to excite her more than I could help, as I saw I was making my audience un comfortable. Such remarks as 'Juliet has found her Romeo' and the like were frequently passed around, and I was be ginning to think it would be a great re lief to meet a train going the same way when we drew up at Effingham.

"Then I made a break, and got off the train. The last thing I heard as the train pulled out, was: 'Come back to me, dear James!' I haven't heard much else since. Where was Billy? Oh, he got off at Tentopolis."
