"Would any Episcopal clergyman be permitted to officiate at such a funeral of one of his parishloners?"

"The decision of the Church has not yet issued. No such case has come up, so there would have to be new legislation on the subject."

so there would have to be new legislation on the subject."

The Right Rev. Stephen Vincent Ryar, Roman Catholic Rishop of western New York, spoke plainly on the subject. He said: "The Catholic Clurch considers cremation to be strictly a pagan custom. There is nothing Christian about it.. The Christian custom is to bury our dead respectfully and sacredly. Consequently, we bless our cometeries: they are hallowed spots around which none but the tenderest memories should cling."

"Might any priest officiate at a crematory functal?"

"No," said the Bishop.

"No," said the Bishop.

"No," was again the answer.

While Catholics here cannot be cremated without forfeiting their religious rights, in the abscence of positive orders against the practice, one or two onless against the practice, one or two Episcopal rectors have expressed a willingness to officiate at crematory funerals. Said one of these:

"The burial service contains the expression fearth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to," the only idea conversed being dust to." dust to, 'the only idea conveyed being that the body goes back into its original elements. The words, 'we therefore commit his (or her) body to the ground,' could be changed to 'we therefore commit his (or her) body to the elements,' or some with expression if the control of or some such expression, if it was deemed undesirable to 'flames' in place of ground. I think the burial service could be used with entire propriety."

The Rev. Sampson Falk of the Temple Beth Zion, in an opinion expressed on the subject, argues that there is no resurrection of the body, and that the disposition of it would not interfere with Only one body has thus far been cremated in Buffalo, and no funeral services were held before or after that

From the Dunder Record. Dunder, N. F.

I was ironihed for a loin time with nervous affections of the heart. It became so severe that I found it difficulty to be down—getting bardly two nights rest in a week. Heart would bent very fast at times, and at other times very slow when lying down could hear every artery in my neck and chest bent, seemingly as loud as a clock's tick. I was treated by some of the best physicians in Steuben and Yates countries, but received no decided benefit. I needdenrify saw one of Dr. Kilmer's "Invalids' stude to Health" and after carefully reading it over comelisted to try a bottle of his Heart Remedy. I did so, and after using four bottles I considered myself enred. I can conscientiously recommend his Ocean-Weed Heart Remedy to any one afflicted as I was. Jan. 1, 1833. W. W. Westcott.
