He looked pityingly upon them, His heart touched with compassion. He could have healed them all with a word, but that would have deverted the great purposes He had in view. Yet, turning to one poor cripple, who had been diseased for thirt-yeight years and who was friendless and alone, He asked him, "Wilt thou be made whole?" The man knew nothing of the character of his questioner and simply told of his misfortune in having no on table of his missionance in having no one to help him into the pool and how that others always got there before he did, wild so one chance after another slipped Denn his grasp. "Rise take up thy bed, and walk," said the Master, and the poor cripple rose, gathered up his sleeping mat and went on his way. It was the Sabbath day and such an event naturally drew a wast crowd together in a few minutes and this mirroulous cure was soon minutes and this miraculous care was soon he all-absorbing tropic of discussion in the city. Jesus had quickly passed out amongst the frowd and so escaped identification, later in the day. He went into the Temple and there found the man He had healed. "Behold, thou art made whole," He said, "sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee". The man at once went to the authorities and told them who it was who had healed him on the Sabbath day.

The storm of opposition which had been gathering in ecclesiastical circles for many mouths now found ready expression Here was a man who did not work i hirmony with them, and hence was not to be telerated. And here was a man who healed the sick on the Sabbath day who heated the sick on the Sabbath day in defiance of their law. They gathered round Jesus with their flerce denunciations and brought Him before the authorities on the charge of Sabbath breaking. But His masterly defense threw them into confusion, as He declared Himself to be Divine, the Son of God, and so equal with God, and they were obliged to set Him free.

It is a remarkable scene. There are the

It is a remarkable scene. There are the judges and authorities eager to convict the accused if possible. There is the man who was healed of his disease and then brought this storm upon Jesus. There is the Master, calm dignified, There is the Master, calm dignified, patient, divine. This was, in a sense, the crisis of His life. Up to this time He had been practically unmolested, but from henceforth His movements were jealously watched, He was harassed, and finally betrayed. This was the beginning of the end.
