THE CHARLES A. VOELKE CO., BALTIMORE, MD.

I LOVED A LASS, A FAIR ONE.

BY GEORGE WITHER.

I loved a lass, a fair one,
As fair as 'er was seen;
She was indeed a rare one,
Another Sheila Queen;
But for all that I was,
I thought she loved me too,
But now, alas! 'tis all over,
Fairest, love, love,
Her like I find gold did glitter,
Each eye was like a star,
She did surpass her sister
Which past all others far;
She would me honey call,
She'd, O—she likes me too,
But now, alas! 'tis all over,
Fairest, love, love,
In summer time to Medley,
My love and I would go,
The treatment there would be,
My love and I to try,
For cream there would we call,
For cakes, and for pines too,
But now, alas! 'tis all over,
Fairest, love, love,
Many a merry meeting
My love and I have had,
She was my only sweeting,
She made my heart full glad;
The tears stood in her eyes,
Like to the morning dew,
But now, alas! 'tis all over,
Fairest, love, love,
And as abroad we walked,
As lovers' fashion is,
O! as we sweetly talked,
The sun would steal a kiss;
The wind upon her lips
Likewise sweetly blew,
But now, alas! 'tis all over,
Fairest, love, love,
Her cheeks were like the cherry,
Her skin as white as snow,
When she was blithe and merry,
She sang like diddow;
Her waist exceeding small,
The dices did fit her shoe,
But now, alas! 'tis all over,
Fairest, love, love,
In summer time or winter,
She had her heart's desire;
I still did seem to stint her,
From sugar, sack, or fire;
The work was never done,
No cares we ever knew,
But now, alas! 'tis all over,
Fairest, love, love,
As we walked home together
At night through the town,
To keep away the weather,
O'er her I'd cast my arms;
No cold my love should feel,
What'er she leaves could do,
But now, alas! 'tis all over,
Fairest, love, love,
Like doves we would be billing,
And dip and kiss so fast,
Yet she would be unwilling
That I should kiss her last;
For when she kissed me about,
She said that I loved her out;
For now, alas! 'tis all over,
Fairest, love, love,
To maiden's vows and swearing,
Ye neverth credit give,
You may give them the hearing,
But neverth believe;
They are as false as fair,
Constant, true, and true;
'Twas I that led her to the bush,
The birds to others flew,
For she, alas! both left me,
Fairest, love, love,
If ever that Dame Nature,
For this false lover's sake,
Another pleasing creature
Like unto her would make;
Let her remember this,
To make the other true,
'Twas I that led her to the bush,
The birds to others flew,
For she, alas! both left me,
Fairest, love, love,
No riches now can raise me,
No want makes me despair,
No misery annoy me,
Nor yet for want I care;
I have lost a goodly friend,
My earthly heaven, said;
Since she, alas! both left me,
Fairest, love, love,

face, and soft, brown eyes. A noble-looking man, with a noble heart. He was wealthy and alone in the world, was Guy Sturdevant; he had no ties of family and only a few tried friends. He stood listening to the music, his soul in his eyes, his face growing slowly red.

"It is beautiful!" cried his friend, lightly; Neil Gordon was apt to judge every thing lightly; but Guy said nothing—spoke no word.

With him the true appreciation of true music could be expressed only by the eloquence of silence. So he stood there like one spell-bound, while the music faltered away and was still.

Then he started and a slight shiver ran over his graceful form like a chill.

The old man held out a very dilapidated hat, Neil Gordon flung a coin into the plate, and Guy Sturdevant drew a bank-note from his pocket and laid it in the old man's grimy hand.

"I have heard Old Bull and the rest," he remarked slowly, "but no violin music has ever touched my heart before. Old man, you ought to be upon the boards! Why do you not play for the public—the fashionable public—in some great theatre?"

A cynical smile crossed the musician's lips, and there was a twinkle in his deep eyes.

"Just light the world!" he ejaculated. "Here I give you my best music, out in the free air, with God's blue sky above our heads, for if you do not choose to contribute you need not, you know? Yet you are not satisfied!"

"I spoke for your good," returned Sturdevant, noting the angry flash of the old man's eyes. "You know that the world never appreciates free favors. To be received and listened to as an artist by the world, one must occupy a definite and respected position."

"Yes, yes, I know. The world of fashion pays its five and ten dollars to hear Patti, yet that same world would scarcely stand in the street to listen to the divine deed's singing, should she sing there unheralded. I understand, sir. Thanks for your generous donation."

And returning his ragged cap to his head, he turned to move away.

"That is a fine instrument," interposed Neil Gordon. "What will you take for it? Old, too. A Cremona, I do believe!" in surprise and attempting to lay his hand upon it. But the old man drew back with a low cry of rage, his face pale, his eyes flashing.

"Don't touch it!" he panted. "I will not sell it—I will starve first! That violin is priceless, sir—worth its weight in gold to me and my child!"

Neil Gordon turned aside with a suave apology, and the old man hurried away. But his sudden movement just at the street crossing, crowded with carriages and hurrying pedestrians, threw him right in the way of a pair of rearing plunging horses, terrified and ready to trample any object in their path.

A moment later and the old man lay upon the ground right under the iron-shod hoofs. But with a swift movement Guy Sturdevant rushed to his side, caught the frightened horses by the bridles, throwing them back upon their haunches, and saving the old musician's life. But he was unconscious, and had suffered injury of some kind. Yet even in his insensibility he clutched the precious violin in his arms, and it was quite unharmed.

Guy Sturdevant had the old man carried into a neighboring drug-store and resuscitated, then he had him placed in a cab, and sent himself to his office.

"I'll be home to have you driven," he said to the old man.
