A DAY IN THE PAMPHIL DORIA.

BY HARRIET BEECHER STOWE. Though the hills are cold and snowy, And the wind drives chill and raw, My heart goes back to a spring-time, Far, far in the past away.

For Love or Gold? BY CLYDE HAYMOND.

"Olivette, Olivette! where are you?" Silence; no sound but the lazy droning of insects, the soft whir of a humming-bird as he flits from flower to flower, and the faint flutter of leaves in the ghost of a south wind that drifts through the rose-scented villa garden.

for me to maintain a stupid frown this warm day," she breaks in, still with unaltered bitterness in the young, light tones. "You have great consideration for Lillian's comfort, Mr. York, and precious little for mine. End of you, I'm sure."

when he ventures the slightest allusion, playful or serious, to any tenderness. "You are right; she does love Charlie Irving," he had said to himself that afternoon when she had left him standing, amazed and troubled, in the sunlit garden; "and she was furiously angry with me for having led her into almost confessing it. And I—moment how dearly I have loved her all along. But I can never hope to win her now. It's easy to see that Irving worship her, and if she loves him—Well—with a heavily-drawn sigh she walks, with slow step and drooping head, toward the house—" "It will be a different thing to me hereafter, that's all!"

THE Effects of Mental Exhaustion.—Many persons, especially those of the nervous system, are the products of daily renewed mental exhaustion. Business avocations often involve an amount of mental labor and exertion so great that they are fatal to physical health, and the professional man, the student, and the artist, are especially liable to suffer from this source of weakness and nerve trouble.
