INDEPENDENT - "Live and Let Live." $1.25 when not paid in Advance. Single Copies 5 Cents.

Supposed to be written by Alexander Strick, during his solitary abode in the Island of Juan Fernandez. I am monarch of all I survey - My right three kingdoms to divide, From the centre all round to the sea, I am lord of the fowl and the brute. O Solitude! where are the charms That soothe the philosopher - nay, the poet? Better dwell in the midst of alarms Than reign in this horrible place. I am out of humanity's reach; I must finish my journey alone, Now hear the sweet music of death - I start at the sound of my own. The beasts that roam over the plain My form with indifference see; They are so unacquainted with me, That I have learned to scorn their hate. Society, friendship and love, I have bestowed upon man! O, had the wings of a dove, I could soon would take you again! My sorrow I feel, but my message I send - In the way of religion and truth - Might learn from the wisdom of age, And be cheered by the smiles of youth. Hellish! what treasure untold Besides that heavenly word - More precious than silver and gold, And that all succeeding ages adore, But the sound of the church-going bell, These valleys and rocks never heard, Never sighed at the sound of a knell, Or melted when a Sabbath appeared. Ye winds that have made me my sport, Convey to this desolate shore, Some cord, enclosing a report Of a land I shall visit no more! My friends - do they now and then send A wish or a thought after me? O, tell me yet I have a friend, Though Aretine Lull now to see, How feet is a glance of the mind! Compared with the speed of its flight, The tempest itself lags behind, And the wind that sweeps across of light, When I think of my own native land, In a moment I seem to be there, But, alas! recollection at hand, Some barrier has come to despair. The sea-fowl is gone to her nest, The hawk is laid down in its lair; Even here is a season of rest, And I to my cabin retire. There's a melody in every sound, And money - marvellous thought! - Gives even all things a new air. And resolves man to his lot.

Worthy of Edgar, and I resolved to win them back to each other. For a time her pride withstood me - and holding, as I seemed to do, my brother's whole future happiness in my hands, you can imagine how anxiously I watched for signs of yielding. But you brought me the message I so much desired - you were ever a harbinger of good, Nina - and, heedless of the approaching storm, I went down to the village to visit the letter that will bring him back to me; and she, cloud that has overhung our family so long will be lifted at last through their restored happiness. So one of the dearest wishes of my life has been fulfilled, and now my heart is pleading for the other - and the answer rests with you, Nina!

"I thought I thought it was also you," said Nina, in a breathless incredulity. "Blind, blind!" interposed Roy, in tender reproach, "we have longed to shall have but one woman, you see, and she shall be you - it is you who have crept into my heart to the exclusion of any and every other! The life for which you risked your own, in your matchless heroism, that fearful night, is yours - only yours! Will you accept the gift, Nina? Shall it be joined with yours through all the glad coming years?" With a gesture at once ardent and tender, Nina winds her arms around his neck, a look of ineffable joy irradiating her dark, lovely face.

"Yes, Roy," she breathes, in a low, happy murmur. "For in your love is my life - I have no other!" QUEER POINTS OF ETIQUETTE. In Sweden, if you address the poorest person in the street you must lift your hat. A man passing a lady on the stairs of a hotel must do the same. To enter a shop or bank with one's hat on is a terrible breach of manners. When a train leaves a platform or a steambath pier all the lookers-on lift their hats to the departing passengers and bow to them, a compliment invariably returned by the travelers. In aristocratic circles in Persia, a visitor sends notice an hour or two before calling. If the visit is of any importance, notice is sent the previous day. As the visitor approaches the house, the servants, mounted or on foot, come forth to meet him, and one returns with speed to announce his coming. According to his relative rank, the host meets him at the foot of the stairs, at the door, or at the upper part of the room. The question of seats is also one requiring the utmost circumspection in observing the various shades of rank.

"Do not detain me!" repeats the resolute girl. "I will save him or give my life for his," and before they can question further she has glided out of the room. Hurrying to her own room, Nina makes some alterations in her costume, winds a shawl around her shoulders, knotting it across her breast, leaving her arms free; then, drawing on a small, close-fitting cap, leaves the house and takes her way down to the river bank. "I cannot give him my love, it is forbidden now. I can give him my life!" she murmurs. "It is five miles by the road to the next bridge, and five back from there to the doctor's house, and every moment of delay adding to his danger. I can swim the river in less time than to go by the road, and it is only my life for his. I will do it - I will save him for her, for what would life be worth to her without him if she loves him as I do?" Looking across the wide stretch of rushing waters, she pauses for a moment with a shudder. She is no stranger to the art of swimming, but she has never attempted a feat like this. "Can she gain the opposite shore through this storm alive?" With a prayer on her lips, she plunges boldly in. The storm waters, the thunder rolls, the rain beats in her face, the waves make a toy of her slender figure; but with undaunted purpose she struggles on, defying danger, courting almost certain death, until the other shore is reached, and she climbs up the bank.

Just back from the river side stands the doctor's house. Struggling to her feet, Nina totters on weak, panting, chilled to the very bone, until the house is reached, her story gasped forth, and then she falls across the threshold in a dead swoon. "I have a boat, happily, saved from the wreck that will take me over - I dare not risk the time to drive round by the road," the doctor is saying, when she recovers consciousness. "As for the brave girl, she must stay here." "No - no! I must go back with you!" pants Nina, struggling to an upright position. "I can help now - do anything - but I must go back with the suspense, the separation will drive me wild." "Come, then," says the doctor, extending his hand, "it will harm you less than to oppose you at this crisis." And a few moments later they are seated in the boat, pulling vigorously for the other shore. Nina seeming once more equipped with superhuman strength. "Roy had not regained consciousness when they reach the house, and the doctor bends over him for some time in grave, almost scrutiny. Then, with a look that lightens their heavy hearts, he says: "It is not too late to revive, and, I trust, to restore him; but it soon would have been. But for this girl's intrepid act, I should not have got her in time. Every moment was of priceless value!" Then, for the second time during that night of peril, Nina faints, and is carried from the room.

Several days pass. Roy, weak still, but slowly gaining, reclines in a comfortable chair, while Nina, who has brought him a refreshing meal, and rendered him such assistance as his wounded arm requires, has turned to leave him, when, putting out his unjaded hand, he draws her to him. "Not yet, Nina," he says softly. "You must not leave me this time, until I tell you my secret - the secret my heart has been yearning so long to utter - I love you!" The rich color surges hotly into the girl's dark, expressive face, then fades, leaving it white to the lips. "Are you trifling with me - deceiving me?" she pants, half mad with mingled pain and passion. "Oh -" "Stay, darling!" he interposes, retaining his hold. "Hear me through! Mother has told you the sad story of my brother's life. When a friend of mother's urged her to remove Miss Ellerton as a boarder for a few weeks, we did not dream that she was the one from whom Edgar had become estranged by that unhappy affair; but mother discovered it in some way, and confided it to me. At first I felt very hardy toward her; but I found her to be a proud, impulsive, but still true and loving woman,

Whenever I find a great deal of gratitude in a poor man I take it for granted there would be as much generosity if he were a rich man. - Fird Repplier. "Mr. Shivers, the man you sent out to interview got mad." Able Editor - "The editor?" "And choked me." "Ye powers!" "And kicked me down stairs." "The low-bringing scoundrel! Spell his name wrong!"
